We all have, I fear, by our personal and voluntary transgressions, not a little improved the wretched inheritance we received from our ancestors. Bp. Porteus.

Neither the verb to improve, nor the noun improvement, is to be found in the common version of the Bible. In Shakspeare, to improve occurs only once; and he uses it in the sense of to make use of, as appears in the preceding quotation. In the poetry of Milton, to improve occurs once (in the sense of to increase, as in the following line):

What might improve their knowledge and my own. P. L.
Improved occurs twice. In one instance it is applied to the change which the body may undergo in tuning to spirit; and in the other it is used in the sense of increased, as in the following citations:

Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit, Improved by tract of time. P. L.

When Satan, who late fled before the threats Of Gabriel out of Eden, now improved In meditated fraud and malice, bent On man's destruction. Paradise Lost.

Taylor, in his "English Synonyms," says, "To improve is wholly a vicious word, of which the signification attributed to it by English writers has no parallel, no corroboration, in the languages whence it has been imported, nor even in modern French."

The meanings of to improve, which correspond with those of improbo in Latin and improver in French, are now entirely obsolete in English; and to improve is now used in senses very different from those of the foreign words, as may be seen above.

This word is sometimes used, in this country, instead of to use, to occupy, or to employ, in a manner deemed improper, and even ludicrous; as, "To improve a house, or a house improved as a tavern"; "To improve a horse"; "To improve a person as a witness," &c. Such uses of the word have been noticed and censured by Franklin, Witherspoon, and Pickering.

Syn. — To improve, to meliorate, to ameliorate, and to better imply the increase of good; to mend, to amend, to emend, and to correct, the removal of evil. — See AMEND, HEIGHTEN.

Syn.—See DECECY.

IN-DEED', ad. [in and deed.] In reality; in truth; in fact; really; truly.

Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile. John i. 47.

It is often used interjectionally. It is sometimes used as a slight assertion or recapitulation in a sense hardly perceptible or explicable; as, "I said I thought it was confederacy between the juggler and the two servants; though, indeed, I had no reason so to think." Bacon. It is used to note concession in comparisons; as, "Ships, not so great of bulk, indeed, but of a more nimble motion." Bacon.

Syn.—Indeed is sometimes used as nearly synonymous with ay; as, "I think, indeed, I am sure, it is so"; or, "I think, ay, I am sure, it is so." In this case, ay is the stronger term. In old English, yea had nearly the same sense; as, "Yea, I judge not my own self." 1 Cor. iv. 3. "A good man always profits by his endeavor; yea, when he is absent; ay, when he is dead, by his example and memory." B. Jonson.

3. (Elec.) The act of putting a minister in actual possession of the church to which he is presented, and of the glebe-land and other temporalities connected with it; institution. Hook.

4. A conclusion, inference, or consequence drawn from a number of particular facts or phenomena. Lyell.

When, by comparing a number of cases, agreeing in some circumstances, but differing in others, and all attended with the same result, a philosopher connects, as a general law of nature, the event with its physical cause, he is said to proceed according to the method of induction. Stewart.

5. (Math.) A kind of demonstration in which a general truth is collected from the examination of particular cases, but in which each particular case is made to depend on the preceding one. Davies.

6. (Elec.) The influence which an electrified body, without the transfer of any portion of its charge, exerts through a non-conducting medium upon an adjacent body, whereby the latter, if insulated, is rendered electro-polar,—the nearer part becoming, in respect to the electrified body, oppositely, and the remoter part similarly, electrified. If the adjacent body is uninsulated, the nearer part only becomes electrified. Faraday.

7. (Electro-Dynamics.) The influence by which an electrical current causes, in the conductor traversed by it or in an adjacent conductor, a secondary or induced current, both when it begins and when it ceases to flow, and likewise when it varies in strength:—also the influence by which magnetism and heat cause electrical currents in closed circuits. Faraday.

8. (Magnetism.) The influence by which a magnet develops magnetism in magnetizable bodies.

9. (Electro-Mag.) The influence by which an electrical current develops magnetism in certain bodies near, or round, which it flows. Lardner.

Syn.—"The principle of deduction is, that things which agree with the same thing, agree with one another. The principle of induction is, that in the same circumstances, and in the same substances, from the same causes the same effects will follow. The mathematical and metaphysical sciences are founded on deduction; the physical sciences rest on induction." Fleming.

"Induction is the counter-process, in scientific method, to deduction. Induction implies the raising of individuals into generals, and these into still higher generalities. Deduction is the bringing down of universals to lower genera, or to individuals. Every deduction, therefore, to be valid, must rest on a prior Induction, which, in order that we may obtain logical certainty, must be a complete induction,—that is to say, must include all the individuals which constitute the genus." Brande.

"The logic of induction consists in stating the facts and the inference in such a manner that the evidence of the inference is manifest; just as the logic of deduction consists in stating the premises and the conclusion in such a manner that the evidence of the conclusion is manifest." Dr. Wheel.

INDUCTIOAL, a. Relating to induction; inductive. [R.] Maunder.

INDUCTIVE, a. [It. inductivo; Sp. inductivo.]

1. Leading; persuasive; — with to.

Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milton.

2. Capable of producing; — with of. "They may be . . . inductive of credibility." Hale.

3. Relating to, conformed to, or proceeding by induction; as, "The inductive method."

This method can only be of two kinds; it must be either inductive or deductive. . . . The Germans being preeminently deductive, the Americans inductive. Dr. Buckle.

4. (Elec.) Able to develop electricity by induction; as, "Inductive force": — also noting the power of dialectics to favor induction through them, or their susceptibility of being acted on by induction; as, "Inductive capacity."

Inductive philosophy, a science which ascends from particular facts to general principles, and then descends from these general principles to particular applications. Whewell.

INDUCTIVE-LY, ad. In an inductive manner; by induction; by inference. South.

INDUCTOMETER, n. [L. induco, inductus, to induce, and metrum (Gr. μέτρον), a measure.] (Elec.) An instrument for measuring electrical induction. Faraday.

INDUCTOR, n. [L.] The person who inducts.

INDUCTRIC, a. (Elec.) Noting electrified bodies which act on other bodies by induction. Faraday.

INDUCTRICAL, a. (Elec.) Pertaining to electrical induction. Faraday.

INDUE' (in-dū'), v. a. [Gr. ἐνδύω; ἐν, on, and δύω, to get into; L. induo; Fr. enduire.] [i. INDUED; pp. INDUING, INDUED.]

1. To put on; to invest; to clothe.

Indued with robes of various hue. Dryden.

2. To endow; to endue.

Hooker.

† INDUEMENT, n. Endowment. W. Mountagu.

INDULGE' (in-dūlj'), v. a. [L. indulgeo; It. indulgere.] [i. INDULGED; pp. INDULGING, INDULGED.]

1. To encourage by compliance; to cherish.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep.

Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryden.

2. To gratify either by concession or by granting; as a voluntary act or favor; to be indulgent to; to favor; to allow; to permit; to suffer.

To live like those that have their hope in another life implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Atterbury.

My friend, indulge one labor more,

And seek Atides. Pope.

3. "If the matter of indulgence be a single thing, it has with before it; if it be a habit, it has in; as, 'He indulged himself with a glass of wine'; and, 'He indulged himself in shameful drunkenness.'" Johnson.

Syn. — See GRATIFY.

INDULGE', v. n. To give, or to practise, indulgence; to be indulgent. Gov. of the Tongue.

INDULGEMENT, n. The act of indulging; indulgence. [R.] Penny Mag.

INDULGENCE, n. [L. indulgentia; It. indulgenza; Sp. indulgencia; Fr. indulgence.]

1. The act of indulging; gratification by compliance, or the forbearance of restraint; — fondness; tenderness.

She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milton.

2. Favor granted; liberality.

If all these gracious indulgences are without any effect upon us, we must perish in our own folly. Rogers.

3. (Theol.) A power claimed by the Roman Catholic Church of granting, to its contrite members, remission, for a certain term, either on earth or in purgatory, of the penalty incurred by their transgressions. Brande.

"Indulgences were the invention of the eleventh century, designed, by Urban II., as a recompense to those who went in person to the Holy Land." Eden.

Syn. — Indulgence and compliance are used both in a good and in a bad sense; fondness, more commonly in a bad or indifferent sense; kindness, gentleness, and mildness, always in a good sense. An indulgent parent; fond mother or nurse; compliant temper; kind neighbor; gentle manner; mild disposition.

INDULGENT, n. Indulgence. [R.] Wotton.

INDULGENT, a. [L. indulgens; It. & Sp. indulgente; Fr. indulgent.]

1. Disposed to indulge or gratify; yielding; compliant; kind or tender.

God has done all for us that the most indulgent Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers.

2. Mild; lenient; tolerant; clement.

The indulgent censure of posterity. Waller.

INDULGENTIAL (-jēn'shəl), a. Relating to the indulgences of the Romish Church. Brevint.

INDULGENT-LY, ad. In an indulgent manner.

INDULGER, n. One who indulges. W. Mountagu.

† INDULT', n. [L. indultus; It. & Sp. indulto; Fr. indult.] A privilege; a pardon; exemption; indulgence. Drummond.

INDUMENT, n. 1. (Zool.) Plumage; indumentum.

2. † Endowment. Lilly.

INDUMENTUM, n. [L., a covering; induo, to put on.] (Zool.) The plumage of birds. Brande.

INDUPPLICATE, a. [L. in, in, and duplico, duplicatus, to double; duplices, double.] (Bot.) Noting valvate pieces of the corolla or calyx, in aestivation, which have the margins of each piece projecting inwards. Gray.

INDURATE [in-dū-rāt, S. W. P. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm. W. B.; in-dū-rāt, Ash], v. a. [L. induro, induratus; in, used intensively, and duro, to harden; It. indurare; Sp. endurear; Fr. endureir.] [i. INDURATED; pp. INDURATING, INDURATED.]

1. To make hard; to harden. "Indurated by fire." Gayton.

2. To make obdurate or unfeeling; to sear, as the conscience. Goldsmith.

INDURATE, v. n. To grow or become hard; to harden. Bacon.

INDURATE, a. 1. Hard; not soft; made hard; indurated. Burton.

2. Obdurate; unfeeling; steeled. [n.] Martin.

INDURATED, p. a. Hardened; made hard; being hard; compact; — obdurate; unfeeling.

INDURATION, n. [It. indurazione; Sp. induración; Fr. induration.]

1. The act of indurating; a hardening. Bacon.

2. The state of being indurated.

3. The state of being obdurate; hardness of heart; obduracy. Decay of Piety.

INDUS, n. (Astron.) A constellation in the southern hemisphere. Hind.

INDUSIAL (in-dū'shəl), a. [L. induo, in, under-garment.] Noting a freshwater limestone found in Auvergne, abounding in the cases (indusia) of caddis-worms, which have been incrustated by carbonate of lime and formed into a hard travertine. Lyell.

INDUSIUM (in-dū'she-ūm), n. [L.] (Bot.) The membrane, being a part of the epidermis, which covers the mature sori, or fruit-dots, of certain genera of ferns: — also the cup formed by the hairs of the style in certain plants, by their uniting so as to enclose the stigma. Lindley.

INDUSTRIAL, a. [Fr. industriel.] Relating to manufactures or to the product of industry or labor; performed by manual labor. Qu. Rev.

Syn. — See INDUSTRY.

INDUSTRIALISM, n. Industry; manual labor; work of the hands. Carlyle.

INDUSTRIALLY, ad. In an industrial manner; by manual labor. [R.] For. Qu. Rev.

INDUSTRIOUS, a. [L. industrius; It. & Sp. industrioso; Fr. industrieux.]

1. Practising industry; diligent; laborious; assiduous; sedulous; — opposed to slothful.

Frugal and industrious men are commonly friendly to the established government. Temple.

2. Laborious to a particular end; active; — opposed to remiss. "Industrious to seek out the truth." Spenser.

Syn. — See DILIGENT, SEDULOUS.

INDUSTRIOUS-LY, ad. In an industrious manner; not idly; diligently. Drayton.

INDUSTRY [in-dūs-trē, S. W. P. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm. W. B.; in-dūs-trē, ruglar], n. [L., It., & Sp. industria; Fr. industrie.] A habit of being constantly employed; diligence; assiduity.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers. More.

Industry pays debts, but despair increases them. Franklin.

Syn. — Industry includes diligence, and something more, for it implies a habit. A man is diligent who is actually employed, and industrious, if disposed always to be employed. Assiduity is an earnest or persevering diligence. Industry is applied to the common employments or business of life. The industry of a farmer or a mechanic; the diligence of a student, and his assiduity in the pursuit of learning. Industrious is applied to the person; industrial (a modern term), to the occupation, especially to manual or manufacturing labor. An industrious man; industrial employment.

INDUSTRIE, n. pl. [L., clothes.] (Bot.) The withered remains of leaves, which, not being articulated with the stem, cannot fall off, but decay upon it. Lindley.

INDUSTRIATE, n. (Bot.) The part covered by indusiae. Lindley.

INDWELL, v. n. To dwell inwardly. Newton.

INDWELLER, n. An inhabitant. Spenser.

INDWELLING, a. Residing within; internal.

INDWELLING, n. The act of dwelling within; interior abode. Whately.

INEBRIANT, a. [See INEBRIATE.] Intoxicating; tending to intoxicate. Smart.

INEBRIANT, n. Any thing that intoxicates; an intoxicating liquor or drug. P. Cye.

INEBRIATE [in-e'bri-āt, S. W. P. J. E. F. K. Sm. W. B.; in-ēb'rē-āt, Ja.], v. a. [L. inebrio, inebriatus; in, used intensively, and ebrio, to intoxicate; ebrius, drunk; It. inebbiare; Sp. inebriar.] [i. INEBRIATED; pp. INEBRIATING, INEBRIATED.]

1. To intoxicate; to make drunk. Sandys.

And while the bubbling and loud-hissing urn
Throws up a steamy column, and the cups
That cheer but not inebriate wait on each,
So let us welcome peaceful evening on. Couper.

2. To exhilarate; to animate. Habington.

INEBRIATE, v. n. To grow drunk; to be or to become intoxicated. Bacon.

INEBRIATE, n. A drunkard. Smart.

INEBRIATION, n. [It. inebbriazione.] Drunkenness; intoxication; ebriety. Browne.

INEBRIATE, n. [in, used intensively, and ebriety.] Drunkenness; ebriety. Walker.

INEBRIATE, n. [in, priv., and edited.] Not edited; unpublished.

INEFFABLE [in-ēf'ā-bl'], n. [L. ineffabilis; It. ineffabile; Sp. inefabilidad; Fr. inéffabilité.] Unspeakableness; ineffableness. [u.] Bailey.

INEFFABLE, a. [L. ineffabilis; in, priv., and effabilis; for, to speak; It. ineffabile; Sp. inefable; Fr. ineffable.] That cannot be spoken; unspeakable; unutterable; inexpressible.

From seeming evil still educating good,
And better thence again, and better still,
In infinite progression — But I lose
Myself in light in light ineffable,
Come, then, expressive Silence, muse his praise. Thomson.

INEFFABLENESS, n. The quality of being ineffable; unspeakableness; ineffability. Scott.

INEFFABLY, ad. In a manner not to be expressed; unspeakably. Milton.

INEFFACEABLE, a. That cannot be effaced or obliterated; indelible. Southey.

INEFFACEABLY, ad. In an ineffaceable manner; so as not to be effaced. Ec. Rev.

† INEFFECITIVE, a. [Fr. ineffectif.]

1. Not effective; producing no effect, or a different effect from that intended; ineffectual; inefficacious.

In a word, [let him calculate] how full, and complete, and contagious his vices have been, and how faint, and partial, and ineffective his best virtues. Hard.

2. Weak; feeble; impotent; inert; powerless; inefficient.

Virtue hates weak and ineffective minds. Bp. Taylor.

IN-EF-FECT'IVE-LY, ad. In an ineffective manner; without effect. Bp. Taylor.

IN-EF-FECT'IVE-NESS, n. The quality of being ineffective. Broune.

IN-EF-FECT'U-AL (in-ef-fekt'yū-al), a. [in, priv., and effectual.] Not effectual; producing no effect, or unable to produce its proper effect; ineffective; weak; inefficacious; inefficient.

The most careful endeavors do not always meet with success, and even our blessed Saviour's preaching, who spake as never man spake, was ineffectual to many. Stillingfleet.

Syn. — Ineffectual endeavor; insufficient force; inefficient aid; inefficacious remedy; weak effort; fruitless labor; vain attempt. — See VAIN.

IN-EF-FECT'U-AL-LY, ad. Without effect.

IN-EF-FECT'U-AL-NESS, n. The state or the quality of being ineffectual; inefficacy.

St. James speaks of the ineffectualness of some men's devotion. Wale.

IN-EF-FER-VES'ENCE, n. Want of effervescence. Brande.

IN-EF-FER-VES'CENT, a. [in, priv., and effervescent.] Not effervescent. Ure.

IN-EF-FER-VES-CI-BIL'I-TY, n. The quality of not effervescing, or of not being susceptible of effervescence. Wright.

IN-EF-FER-VES-CI-BLE, a. Not capable of effervescence. Wright.

IN-EF-FI-CI'OUS (in-ef-fē-kā'shūs), a. [L. inefficax, inefficax; in, priv., and efficax, efficacious; It. inefficace.] Not efficacious; unable to produce any effect, or the effect desired or intended; ineffectual; ineffective.

Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and by frequent use, misapply and render inefficacious this useful remedy? Locke.

IN-EF-FI-CI'OUS-LY, ad. In an inefficacious manner; without efficacy. Scott.

IN-EF-FI-CI'OUS-NESS, n. Inefficacy. Todd.

IN-EF-FI-CA-CY, n. [L. & It. inefficacia; Sp. inefficacia; Fr. inefficacité.] Want of efficacy or power; want of effect; ineffectualness.

All experience of their [assigmate] inefficacy does not in the least discourage them. Burke.

IN-EF-FI'CIEN-CY (in-ef-fish'en-se), n. Want of efficiency or power; weakness.

Numerous texts affirm this total insensibility and inefficiency of all such entities in the most absolute terms. Lau.

IN-EF-FI'CIENT (in-ef-fish'ent), a. [in, priv., and efficient.] Not efficient; having little energy; inactive; ineffectual; inefficacious.

He is as insipid in his pleasure as inefficient in every thing else. Chesterfield.

Syn. — See INEFFECTUAL.

IN-E-LAB'Q-RATE, a. [L. inelaboratus.] Not elaborate; not done with much care. Warburton.

IN-E-LAS'TIC, a. Not elastic; unelastic. Roget.

IN-E-LAS-TIC'I-TY, n. Want of elasticity. Roget.

IN-EL'E-GANCE, n. [L. inelegantia; It. ineleganza; Fr. inelegance.] Want of elegance, grace, or beauty. Cawthorn.

IN-EL'E-GAN-CY, n. Inelegance. Johnson.

IN-EL'E-GANT, a. [L. inelegans; in, priv., and elegant; It. & Sp. inelegante; Fr. élégant.] Not elegant; not beautiful or graceful; tasteless. "Inelegant translations." Broom.

IN-EL'E-GANT-LY, ad. In an inelegant manner; not elegantly; coarsely. Johnson.

IN-EL-I-GI-BIL'I-TY, n. [It. ineligibleità; Fr. inéligibilité.] The state of being ineligible. Perry.

IN-EL-I-GI-BLE, a. [Fr.] That cannot be chosen.

He that cannot be admitted cannot be elected; and the votes given to a man ineligible, being given in vain, the highest number of an eligible candidate becomes a majority. Johnson.

IN-EL-I-GI-BLY, ad. Not eligibly. Dr. Allen.

IN-EL'O-QUENT, a. [L. ineloquens; It. ineloquente.] Not eloquent; not persuasive; not oratorical.

Nor are thy lips ungraceful, sire of men,
Nor tongue ineloquent. Milton.

IN-EL'O-QUENT-LY, ad. Without eloquence.

†IN-E-LÜCT'A-BLE, a. [L. ineluctabilis.] Not to be overcome. Pearson.

IN-E-LÜ'DI-BLE, a. [L. ineludibilis.] That cannot be eluded or escaped. Glanvill.

IN-EM'BRY-Q-N-ATE, a. Having no embryo. Reid.

†IN-E-NÄR'RA-BLE, a. [L. inenarrabilis.] That cannot be told. Cockeram.

IN-EPT', a. [L. ineptus; in, priv., and aptus, apt; It. & Sp. inepto; Fr. inept.]

1. Not apt or fit; unsuitable; useless; unapt.

Mere sterile matter such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

2. Trifling; foolish. Blackmore.

IN-EPT'U-TÜDE, n. [L. ineptitudo; It. ineptitudine; Sp. ineptitud; Fr. ineptitude.]

1. Unfitness; inaptitude. "Some ineptitude or resistance to rotation." Wilkins.

2. Folly; foolishness. Carlyle.

IN-EPT'LY, ad. Triflingly; foolishly; unftly.

IN-EPT'NESS, n. Unfitness; ineptitude. "Miserable ineptness of infancy." [R.] More.

IN-E'QUA-BLE, a. [in, priv., and equable.] Not equable; unequable. Bailey.

IN-E'QUAL'I-TY (in-ē-kwō'l-tē), n. [L. inaequalitas; in, priv., and aequalitas, equality; It. inequalitè; Sp. inequalitad; Fr. inégalité.]

1. The state of being unequal; difference in quantity, degree, dimensions, condition, or quality of any kind; disparity. "Inequality of number." Ludlow. "Inequalities in events." Wayburton. "Inequality in the length." Ray. "Inequality between man and man." Hooker.

Inequality of air is ever an enemy to health. Bacon.

2. Unevenness; the state of not being level; want of uniformity of surface. "Inequalities all over the glass." Newton.

3. Disproportion; inadequacy.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he proposed in the expectation. South.

4. (Algebra.) An expression of two unequal quantities connected by the sign of inequality, as, $8 > 6$, or $6 < 7$. Davies & Peck.

5. (Astron.) The deviation in the motion of a planet or satellite from its uniform mean motion. Brande.

Syn. — See DIFFERENCE.

IN-E-QUI-DIS'TANT, a. Not being equally distant; not equidistant. Craig.

IN-E-QUI-LÄT'ER-AL, a. [in, priv., and equilateral.] (Bot.) Not equilateral; unequal sided, as the leaves of certain plants. Gray.

IN-E-QUI-LIB'RI-Ö. [L.] In an even poise or balance; in equilibrium. Crabb.

IN-EQ'UI-TA-BLE (ēn-ēk'wē-tā-bl), a. [L. inequitabilis; in, priv., and equitabilis, equitable.]

1. Not equitable; unjust; partial.

The proportions seemed not inequitable. Burke.

2. Inequable; not even. "Inequitable disposition." Search.

†IN-EQ'UI-TATE (ēn-ēk'wē-tāt), v. a. [L. in, upon, and equito, equitatus, to ride.] To ride on or over; to pervade. More.

IN-E'QUI-VÄLVE, a. Having unequal valves; inequivalvular. Woodward.

IN-E'QUI-VÄL'VU-LAR, a. Having unequal valves; inequivalve. Bush.

In them it would appear inflation. B. Jonson.

IN-FLÈCT', v. a. [L. inflecto; in, used intensi- vely, and flecto, to bend; It. inflettere; Fr. infléchir.] [i. INFLECTED; pp. INFLECTING, IN- FLECTED.]

1. To turn from a rectilinear course; to bend.
Not to be directly, or at length, but somewhat inflected, that the muscles may be at rest. Browne.

2. (Gram.) To vary in its terminations, as a noun or a verb.

IN-FLÈCT'ED, p. a. Bent; turned aside; bent inwards; crooked:—varied in its termination.

IN-FLÈC'TION, n. [L. inflectio; It. inflessione;
Sp. & Fr. inflexión.]

1. The act of inflecting or turning from a right line or course; curvature; curvity.

2. (Gram.) The change of form which words undergo in order to express different relations; as the change of termination of a verb to indicate its relation to persons; as, "Speak, speak-est"; or the change of termination of a noun in declension; as, "John, John's." Fowler.

"Infection, in strictness of language, is any change which takes place in a word from a modification of its sense between the root and the termination.
The infection must, therefore, not be confounded with the termination itself. Thus the syllable am is the root of all the words employed in the conjugation of the Latin verb amo, I love;—in the imperfect tense the infection is the syllable ab. The termination varies according to the person,—amabam, amabas, ama- bat." Brande.

3. (Mus. & Elocution.) A modulation or movement of the voice; an expressive variation of

This consideration leads me to conjecture that the acute accent of the ancients was really the rising inflection or upward slide of the voice. Walker.

4. (Opt.) Deviation of pencils of light from their rectilinear course on passing by the edges of opaque bodies, or through minute apertures, accompanied, usually, by colored fringes, or alternations of light and shade, &c.;—called also diffraction. The deviation is caused, according to the undulatory theory of light, by luminous waves extending themselves into the geometrical shadow, and the fringes, &c., are caused by their interference. Lloyd.

Point of inflection, (Math.) the point at which a curve ceases to be concave and becomes convex, or the reverse, with respect to a given straight line not passing through the point;—called also point of contrary flexure. Davies.

also as to actual infliction. South.

2. A punishment imposed; judgment.

His severest inflictions are in themselves acts of justice and

IN-FLÌC'TIVE, a. [It. inflittivo; Sp. inflittivo;
Fr. inflictif.] Tending to inflict. Whitehead.

IN-FLQ-RÈS'CENCE, n. [L. infloresco, inflores- cent, to blossom; It. infiorescenza; Sp. efflorescencia; Fr. inflorescence.] (Bot.) The mode of flowering; the situation and arrangement of flowers upon the stem or branch. Gray.

IN-FLQW', v. n. To flow in. Wiseman. E. Everett.

IN-FLU-ENCE, n. [L. influo, influens, to flow in;
in and fluo, to flow; It. influenza; Sp. influencia; Fr. influence.]

1. An impulsive or directing power; a power whose operation is known only by its effect; sway; bias; control;—formerly followed by into, now by on or with.

Every man, however humble his station or feeble his powers, exercises some influence on those who are about him for good or for evil. Prof. Sedgwick.

2. The imagined power of the planets upon terrestrial bodies or upon terrestrial affairs.

Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion? Job xxxvii. 31.

3. Weight of character; reputation; credit; favor;—ascendency; authority; sway; as, "A man of influence."

"Whenever the word influence occurs in our English poetry, down to comparatively a modern date, there is always, more or less remote allusion to the skyey or planetary influences supposed to be exercised by the heavenly bodies upon men." Trench.

IN-FLU-ENCE, v. a. [i. INFLUENCED; pp. IN- FLUENCING, INFLUENCED.] To act upon with directing or impulsive power; to guide or lead;

fluence or power of any kind, particularly moral power; having influence or authority; predominating; predominant. Glanvill. Southey.

Thy influential vigor reaspires
This feeble frame. Thomson.

An influential and leading inhabitant. Genl. Mag.

Influential has been represented as an Americanism by Boucher and others; but it is an old word still in good use in England.

INFUSORIAL, n. pl. (Zool.) A term applied to the numerous minute animals found in water, commonly called animalcules. Eng. Cyc.

"Otto Frederic Muller first separated them [the infusoria] as a distinct order; and as the greater number of animalcules had been detected in liquids in which vegetable or animal matters had been dissolved by infusion, he gave them the name Infusoria. — Under the class Infusoria, Ehrenberg embraced two very different forms of animal life. He divided them into Polygastrea and Rotifera. The latter division included the animals known by the name of wheel-animalcules. The Polygastrea, so called from the supposition that the typical forms possessed a number of stomachs, included all the remaining species of Infusoria." Eng. Cyc. — The Infusoria, as a class, do not exist. It has been proved that a part of them are plants or their spores, others are the young of different animals, and the rest are perfect animals. Agassiz.

1. Unfriendly; hostile; unkind.

2. Adverse; hurtful; pernicious.

The slave-trade is inimical to every improvement in the moral and civil condition of the Africans. Paley, 1792.

"This word sprung up in the House of Commons about ten years ago [since 1780], and has since been so much in use as to make us wonder how we did so long without it. It had, indeed, one great recommendation, which was, that it was pronounced in direct opposition to the rules of our own language. An Englishman, who had never heard it pronounced, would, at first sight, have placed the accent on the antepenultimate, and have pronounced the penultimate short; but the vanity of showing its derivation from the Latin inimicus, where the penultimate is long, and the very oddity of pronouncing this i long in inimical, made this pronunciation fashionable. I know it may be urged that this word, with respect to sound, was as great an oddity in the Latin language as it is in ours,—and that the reason for making the i long was its derivation from amicus," Walker.

"The word inimical, previous to the American [revolutionary] war, could, I believe, plead in its favor only one authority." Crombie.

The word inimical was inserted by Edward Phillips in his Dictionary entitled "The New World of Words" (edition of 1675), in a list of words the use of which was disapproved. Ash inserted it in his Dictionary (1775) with the remark "not used." Richardson says of it, "a modern, but very common word."

IN-SĒC'TA, n. pl. (Zool. or Ent.) A class of Articulata; insects. — See INSECT.

IN'SĒCT, n. [L. insectum; in, in, and seco, to cut; It. insetto; Sp. insecto; Fr. insecte.]

1. (Ent.) One of a class of viviparous or oviparous animals, having a body marked by several cross-lines or incisions, the parts between these lines being called segments or rings, and consisting of a number of jointed pieces more or less movable on each other. T. W. Harris.

2. "Insects, in their perfect state, have six legs, two antennæ, two pairs of wings, and two compound eyes, each consisting of a great number of single eyes closely united together and incapable of being rolled in their sockets. They have a very small brain, and instead of a spinal marrow, a kind of knotted cord, extending from the brain to the hinder extremity. Two long air-pipes, within their bodies, together with an immense number of smaller pipes, supply the want of lungs, and carry the air to every part. They do not breathe through their mouths, but through little holes, called spiracles, generally nine in number, along each side of the body. Some, however, have the breathing-holes placed in the hinder extremity, and a few young water-insects breathe by means of gills. Most insects, in the course of their lives, are subject to very great changes of form, or metamorphoses, as they are called, so that the same insect, at different ages, might be mistaken for as many different animals. Caterpillars, grubs, and maggots undergo a complete transformation in coming to maturity; but there are other insects, such as crickets, grasshoppers, bugs, and plantlice, which, though differing a good deal in the young and adult states, are not subject to so great a change, their transformations being only partial. In winged or adult insects two of the transverse incisions are deeper than the rest, so that the body seems to consist of three principal portions, the first of which is the head, the second or middle portion the thorax, and the third or hindmost the abdomen. In some wingless insects these three portions are also to be seen; but in most young insects, or larvae, the body consists of the head, and a series of twelve rings or segments, as may be perceived in caterpillars, grubs, and maggots." T. W. Harris.

 1. (Chron.) The act of intercalating; the insertion into the calendar of a portion of time out of the usual order. "The Roman year, as established by Numa, was divided into twelve months, according to the course of the moon, consisting in all of 355 days. But as ten days, five hours, forty-eight minutes, and fifty-eight seconds were wanting to make the lunar year correspond to the course of the sun, he intercalated every other year an extraordinary month, which consisted alternately of 22 and 23 days during periods of 23 years, the last biennium in the 23 years being entirely passed over. The intercalation of this month was left to the discretion of the pontifices, who, by inserting more or fewer days, used to make the current year longer or shorter, as was most convenient for themselves or their friends; for instance, that a magistrate might sooner or later resign his office, or contractors for the revenue have longer or shorter time to collect the taxes. Julius Cæsar abolished those intercalations, and established the division of time known as the Julian year." P. Cyc.
 2. (Geol.) The interposition of a bed or stratum of one kind of rock or substance between beds or strata of another. C. T. Jackson. The inclusion of a mass of rock within intruded rocks. Lyell.

IR-I-DĒC'TO-MY, n. [Gr. ἰρις, ἰριδος, the iris, and ἐκτομή, a cutting out; Fr. iridectomie.] (Surg.) Excision of a portion of the iris for the formation of an artificial pupil. Wright.

IR-I-DĒS'CENCE (ir-ē-dēs'sens, K. W. b.; i-rē-dēs'sens, Sm.), n. [It. iridescenza.] The property of shining with colors resembling those of the rainbow; — prismatic colors exhibited by certain substances, as mother-of-pearl, soap-bubbles, &c., when seen in a certain direction, and caused by interference of light. Powell.

IR-I-DĒS'CĒNT, a. [Fr.] Colored, or shining with many colors, as the rainbow; irised. Ed. Ency.

IR-ID'IAN, a. Relating to the iris. Dunglison.

IR-ID'ŪM, n. [Gr. ἰρις, ἰριδος, a rainbow.] (Chem.) The most infusible, and, when compact, one of the heaviest, of the metals, very hard, unmalleable, and brittle, and, when polished, resembling platinum. It is oxidizable only at a red heat and in a state of fine division, and, if pure, is not attacked by any acid. It takes its name from the variety of colors exhibited by a solution of oxide of iridium and potassa in hydrochloric acid. Turner. Regnault.

IR'IDZE, v. a. To coat or tip with iridium. "Iridized wire." Smithsonian Report.

IR-I-DŌS'MINE, } n. (Min.) A compound of IR-I-DŌS'M'ŪM, } iridium and osmium, with occasionally a small quantity of iron and rhodium; — occurring commonly in irregular, flattened grains. Dana.

IR'IS, n.; pl. L. IR'IS-DES; Eng. IR'IS-ES. [Gr. ἰρις, the rainbow; L. iris.]

1. The rainbow. "The solar iris." Brycne.

2. Any thing resembling the rainbow. Newton.

3. (Anat.) A membrane stretched vertically at the anterior part of the eye, in the midst of the aqueous humor, in which it forms a kind of circular, flat partition, separating the anterior from the posterior chamber; — so called on account of the various colors of that part of the eye.

The use of the iris seems to be, to regulate, by its dilatation and contraction, the quantity of luminous rays necessary for distinct vision. The different colors of the iris occasion the variety in the colors of the human eye. Dunglison.

4. (Astron.) One of the asteroids whose orbits lie between those of Mars and Jupiter; — discovered by Hind in 1847. Herschel.

5. (Bot.) The flower-de-luce (Fr. fleur de lis); the name of a genus of plants, so called from the beauty and variety of their colors. Loudon.

IR'RI-SĀT-ED, a. Exhibiting the colors of the iris, or rainbow; exhibiting the prismatic colors. Smart.

IR'RI-SŌPE, n. [Gr. ἰρις, the rainbow, and σκοπεῖν, to behold.] (Opt.) An instrument for exhibiting the prismatic colors. Brewster.

IR'ISED (i'rist), a. Relating to the iris, or rainbow. Brynycastle.

IR'ISH, n. 1. The Irish language.

The Irish and Erse so nearly resemble each other, that, after a short familiarity with the pronunciation, the Irish and Scottish Highlanders have no difficulty in understanding each other. Brande.

2. A game resembling backgammon. Hall.

3. Linen made in Ireland. Todd.

4. pl. The people of Ireland. Johnson.

IR'ISH, a. Belonging to, or produced in, Ireland.

IR'ISH-ISM, n. An Irish idiom or phrase; an Hibernicism. Reed.

IR'ISH-MŌSS, n. (Bot.) A species of sea-weed (Chondrus crispus), whose gelatinous qualities render it valuable as an article of food; — called also Carrageen-moss. Lindley.

IR'ISH-RY, n. The people of Ireland. A rising of the Irishry against the Englishry was no more to be apprehended. Macaulay.

IR'ITE, n. (Min.) A black, shining, magnetic mineral, composed of oxides of iridium, osmium, iron, and chromium. Dana.

IR'ITIS, n. (Med.) Inflammation of the iris of the eye. Brande.

IRK (irk), v. a. [Goth. yrkia, to urge on. Serenius. — A. S. wære, ache, pain. Skinner. — Icel. yrk, work. Johnson. — A. S. corian, to be angry. Richardson. — A. S. eary, slothful. Webster.] To give pain to; to weary; to trouble.

It ails his heart he cannot be revenged. Shak.

Now scarcely used, except impersonally; formerly it took a personal subject.

This dissension between his friends somewhat irked him. Sh.

IRK'SOME (irk'sum), a. Wearisome; wearying; tedious; tiresome; troublesome. "The irksome hours." "Irksome toil." Milton.

Thy company, which erst was irksome to me, I will endure. Shak.

Syn. — See TROUBLESOME.

IRK'SOME-LY (irk'sum-lē), ad. In an irksome manner; wearisomely; tediously. Guardian.

IRK'SOME-NESS (irk'sum-nēs), n. Tediousness; wearisomeness; tiresomeness. Milton.

IR'ON (i'urn) [i'urn, S. W. P. J. F. Sm. C. W. r.; i'urn, E. Ju. K. Nares], n. [Goth. cisarns; A. S. isen, or iren; Dut. ijzer; Frs. isen; Ger. eisen; Dan. jern; Icel. járn; Sw. jern, or jurn; W. haiarn.]

1. The most common, useful, and tenacious of the metals, extremely hard, yet ductile and malleable, capable of being welded, fusible at a very high heat, and oxidizable by moist, but not by dry, air.

Iron is very widely diffused, constituting, according to the estimate of Buckland, about two per cent. of the mineral crust of the earth, but rarely found except in combination with other substances. It constitutes the larger part of many meteoric stones. The strongest iron has a fibrous structure, which becomes, however, granular or lamellated by vibration. Combined with a variable quantity of carbon, and occasionally of silicon, aluminum, and phosphorus, it forms steel. It readily acquires and loses magnetism. Some of the compounds of iron have valuable medicinal qualities. It is nearly eight times as heavy as water. Turner. Regnault.

2. An instrument made of iron. "A box iron." "A smoothing iron." Johnson.

Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons? Job xii. 7.

3. pl. Fetters; manacles; shackles. "He was put in irons." Johnson.

Cast iron, a compound of iron and carbon, and frequently containing, in addition, a quantity of silicon, sulphur, phosphorus, and manganese; called also crude or pig iron. Regnault. It his cast iron, a variety of cast iron consisting approximately of four equivalents of iron and one of carbon. It is very hard and brittle, and its fracture exhibits crystalline plates. Gramham. — Gray or mottled cast iron, a variety of cast iron presenting a fracture consisting of small crystals, easily cut by the file, and supposed to contain a portion of uncombined carbon diffused through it in the form of graphite. Gramham. — Soft or malleable iron, iron of a fibrous texture, obtained from cast iron by freeing it from its impurities, with the exception of about half per cent. of carbon and traces of silicon and other metals, and subjecting it, while hot, to the operation of hammering and rolling; — called also bar iron, puddled iron, forged iron, and wrought iron. Gramham. — Hot short iron, iron which is ductile when cold, but extremely brittle when heated, — a defect caused by the presence of a small quantity of sulphur. Accum. Regnault.—Cold short iron, iron which is highly ductile when hot, but extremely brittle when cold,—a defect caused by the presence of a small quantity of phosphorus. Accum. Regnault.—Blue iron, an ore consisting chiefly of phosphate of the protoxide of iron and water: a variety of vivianite. Dana.—Magnetic iron, a mineral composed of the protoxide and peroxide of iron, and possessed of magnetic properties,—called also lodestone and magnetite.—Arsenical iron, a mineral composed of iron, arsenic, and sulphur; a variety of mispickel. Dana.—Meteoric iron, a compound consisting of iron with a small proportion of various other substances, of which nickel is usually the principal;—so called because it falls from the atmosphere;—also called meteorite, and aerolite. A meteorite, weighing 1325 lbs., belongs to Yale College, and there is another, weighing 14,000 lbs., in Brazil. Dana.—Spathic, or sparry iron, a mineral composed chiefly of carbonate of protoxide of iron; chalybite. Dana.—Specular iron, a mineral consisting of brilliant and often iridescent crystals of peroxide of iron; abundant in Elba. Dana.—Titaniferous iron, a mineral composed of oxide of titanium and peroxide of iron; a variety of ilmenite. Dana.

IR'ON (i'urn), a. 1. Made of iron. "Iron walls." "An iron crown." Shak.
2. Resembling iron in color. Woodward.
3. Harsh; stern; rude and miserable, as opposed to golden or silver in the sense of happy; as, "The iron age"; "Iron years of war." Pope.
4. Indissoluble; not to be broken. "Him death's iron sleep oppressed." Phillips.
5. Dull; stupid. "An iron-witted fool." Shak.
6. Capable of great endurance; vigorous; strong; robust; as, "An iron constitution."

IR'ON (i'urn), v. a. [i. IRONED; pp. IRONING, IRONED.]
1. To smoothen with an iron. Johnson.
2. To shackle with irons. Johnson.

IR'ON-BÖUND (i'urn-), a. Bound or encircled with iron, or as with iron. Drayton.

IR'ON-CLÄD (i'urn-), a. Clad or armed with iron. Wright.

IR'ON-CLÄY, n. (Min.) Argillaceous iron ore, including several varieties of hematite. Dana.

IR'ON-CRÖWN, n. A golden crown, set with precious stones, preserved at Monza, in Milan, with which, anciently, the kings of Italy, and afterwards the Roman emperors, were crowned, when they assumed the character of kings of Lombardy;—so called from an iron circle in it said to have been forged from a nail of the cross of Christ. Ency. Am.

IR'ONED (i'urnd), a. Armed; dressed in iron; confined in irons; fettered. Hubert.

IR'ON-ER (i'urn-er), n. One who irons. Clarke.

IR'ON-FIL'INGS (i'urn-), n. pl. Particles of iron made by filing or rasping. Wright.

IR'ON-FLINT, n. (Min.) A crystalline mineral of quartz, of a yellow or red color, due to oxide of iron; ferruginous quartz. Dana.

IR'ON-FÖUND'ER (i'urn-), n. One who founds or casts iron. Craig.

IR'ON-FÖUND'ER-Y (i'urn-), n. A foundry in which iron castings are made. Craig.

IR'ON-FRÄMED (i'urn-främd), a. Framed of iron, or as of iron. Wright.

IR'ON-GLÄNCE (i'urn-gläns), n. (Min.) A peroxide of iron of a dark steel-gray color; a variety of hematite. Dana.

IR'ÖN'IC, } a. [It. & Sp. ironico; Fr. ironique, ironique.] Relating to, or containing, irony; expressing one thing and meaning another; derisive; mocking.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.

IR'ÖN'IC-ÖAL-NÖSS, n. The state or the quality of being ironical. Ash.

IR'ON-ING (i'urn-), n. The act of one who irons.

IR'ON-ING-BÖARD, n. A board used by tailors, laundresses, &c., for pressing cloth upon with an iron to smoothen the seams, &c. Simmonds.

IR'ON-IST, n. One who deals in irony. Hurd.

IR'ON-LÖÖ'UÖR (i'urn-lük'ur), n. (Chem.) An impure solution of acetate of iron, used as a mordant by calico-printers. Parnell.

IR'ON-MÖN-ÖER (i'urn-müng-ger, 82), n. A dealer in iron; a shopkeeper who vends hardware and iron tools and utensils. Simmonds.

IR'ON-MÖN-ÖER-Y (i'urn-müng-ger-e), n. Miscellaneous articles of iron, such as those usually sold by iron-mongers. Simmonds.

IR'ON-MÖULD (i'urn-möld), n. A mark or spot on linen occasioned by the rust of iron. Junius.

IR'ON-PY-RIT'ES, n. [Gr. pyrites, of, or in, fire; πίρ, fire.] (Min.) Bisulphuret of iron. It usually occurs in small cubes, has a metallic lustre, is of a bronze-yellow color, brittle, and strikes fire with steel. Dana.

IR'ON-SÄND, n. (Min.) A variety of magnetic oxide of iron in the state of minute crystals or grains. Cleveland.

IR'ON-SCRÄPS (i'urn-), n. pl. The cuttings or parings of iron work. Simmonds.

IR'ON-SHÖATHED (i'urn-shäthd), a. Sheathed with iron. Wright.

IR'ON-SHÖD (i'urn-), a. Shod with iron. Wright.

IR'ON-SÖCK, a. (Vaut.) Applied to old vessels, when the iron-work becomes loose. Mar. Dict.

IR'ON-SÖD-ED, a. Hardy; rough; strong. Forby.

IR'ON-SMITH (i'urn-), n. A worker in iron; a blacksmith. Wright.

IR'ON-STÖNE (i'urn-stön), n. (Min.) A variety of limonite; hydrous peroxide of iron and water. Dana.

Clay iron-stone, carbonate of iron mixed with various proportions of earthy matter; argillaceous iron-ore. Eng. Cyc.

IR'ON-WÖD (i'urn-wüd), n. (Bot.) The popular name of several species of trees, so called on account of the weight and hardness of their wood; viz., Metrosideros vera, native to the East Indies, and used by the Chinese for rudders and anchors; Sideroxylon inerme, native to the Cape of Good Hope; and Ostrya virginica, native to the United States, and called also hophornbeam and lever-wood. Loudon.

IR'ON-WÖRK (i'urn-würk), n.; pl. iron-works.
1. pl. A place where iron is manufactured.

2. Any thing made of iron; the parts of a building or a machine which consist of iron.

IR'ON-WÖRT (i'urn-würt), n. The popular name of the genus of plants called Sideritis, the flowers of which frequently have a ferruginous color. Loudon.

IR'ON-Y (i'urn-e), a. 1. Made of iron; partaking of iron. "Irony particles." Woodward.

2. Resembling iron in any of its qualities; as, "An irony taste."

IR'ÖN-Y (i'urn-e), n. [Gr. εἰρωνεία; εἰρων, a dissembler in speech; ἴσ, It. & Sp. ironia; Fr. ironie.] (Rhet.) A figure by which that which is said is contrary to what is meant; a mode of speech in which the meaning is contrary to the words, or in which praise is bestowed when censure is intended; a delicate species of sarcasm or satire; raillery; mockery.

When a notorious villain is accomplished with the titles of a very honest and excellent person, the character of the person commended, the air of content that appears in the speaker, and the exorbitancy of the commendations, sufficiently discover the irony. London Ency.

Syn.—See SATIRE.

†IR'ÖUS, a. Angry; passionate; ireful. Chaucer.

†IR'P, or IR'PE, n. [Etymology unknown. Richardson.] A fantastic grimace or contortion of body;—so defined by Gifford. "Smirks, irps, and all affected humors." B. Jonson.

IR'P, a. Making grimaces. B. Jonson.

—A word twice used by Ben Jonson, once as an adjective, and once as a substantive; but in both ways without a clear meaning; nor does its origin very clearly appear. Nares.

IR-RÄ'DI-ÄNCE, n. [L. irradio, irradians, to irradiate.—See IRRADIATE.]

1. Emission of rays of light on an object; irradiation; radiation. Brown.

2. A beam of light emitted. Milton.

IR-RÄ'DI-ÄN-CY, n. Irradiance. Brown.

IR-RÄ'DI-ÄNT, a. Emitting rays of light. Boysie.

IR-RÄ'DI-ÄTE [ir-rä'de-ät, W. P. J. Ja. Sm. R. W.; ir-rä'dy-ät, S. E. F. K.], v. a. [L. irradiare, irradiare; in, upon, and radio, to shine; It. irradiare; Sp. irradiar.] [i. IRRADIATED; pp. IRRADIATING, IRRADIATED.]

1. To dart rays upon; to adorn with light; to brighten; to illuminate; to illumine; to illumine. "The whole place it irradiates." Digby.

2. To enlighten intellectually; to illuminate. So much the rather thou, celestial Light, Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers irradiate. Milton.

3. To animate by heat or by light. Hale.

4. To decorate, as with shining ornaments. "Our shrines irradiate." Pope.

IR-RÄ'DI-ÄTE, v. n. To emit rays; to shine. "On which light irradiated." Sp. Horne.

IR-RÄ'DI-ÄTE, a. Adorned with light or brightness; illuminated. Mason.

IR-RÄ'DI-Ä'TION, n. [It. irradiazione; Sp. irradiación; Fr. irradiation.]

1. The act of irradiating; irradiance. Digby.

2. Illumination; intellectual light. Hale.

3. (Opt.) An optical illumination which causes objects, whether seen with, or without, optical instruments, to seem slightly larger than they really are, in consequence of the retina being affected, not only where the image is, but also near its borders.

—*Ir*radation increases with the brightness of the object, diminishes as the illumination of the object and that of the field of view approach equality, and vanishes when they become equal. Nichol.

IR-RÄD'I-CÄTE, v. a. [L. in, in, and radix, radix, a root.] To fix by the root; to insert firmly. [R.] Clissold.

IR-RÄ'TION-ÄL (ir-räsh'un-äl) [ir-räsh'un-äl, S. W. P. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm. R. W.; ir-räsh'un-äl, Wb.], a. [L. irrationalis; in, priv., and rationalis, rational; ratio, reason; It. irrazionale; Sp. irracional; Fr. irrationnel.]
1. Not rational; void of reason.

Inferior creatures mute, Irrational, and brute. Milton.

2. Absurd; contrary to reason; unreasonable; foolish; silly; unwise; preposterous. "Not wishing so irrational a thing." Pope.

3. (Arith. & Algebra.) Noting a quantity which cannot be exactly expressed by an integral number or by a vulgar fraction, and, in general, any indicated root of an imperfect power of the degree indicated. Davies & Peck.

Syn.—See ABSURD.

IR-REC-ÖN-CIL'A-BLE, a. [It. irreconciliabile; Sp. irreconcilable; Fr. irréconciliable.]

1. That cannot be reconciled or appeased; unappeasable. "Irreconcilable to our grand foe." Milton.

2. That cannot be made consistent; inconsistent; incompatible; incongruous. "Such gross, irreconcilable absurdities." Rogers.

IR-REC-ÖN-CIL'A-BLE-NÖSS, n. Impossibility of being reconciled. Ld. Shaftesbury.

IR-RĒC-QŌN-CĪL'A-BLY, ad. In an irreconcilable manner; so as not to admit of reconciliation.

† IR-RĒC-QŌN-CĪLE, v. a. To alienate. Bp. Taylor.

IR-RĒC-QŌN-CĪLED (ir-rĕk'qŏn-sīld), a. 1. Not reconciled; unappeased. Prudeau.
2. Not atoned for. "Many irreconciled iniquities." Shak.

IR-RĒC-QŌN-CĪLE-MĒNT, n. Want of reconciliation; irreconciliation; disagreement. Wake.

IR-RĒC-QŌN-CĪL-I-Ā'TIŌN, n. Want of reconciliation; irreconcilment. Bp. Prudeau.

IR-RĒ-CŌRD'A-BLE, a. [L. irrecordabilis.] Not to be recorded. Cocheram.

IR-RĒ-CŌV'ĒR-A-BLE (ir-rĕ-kŏv'er-a-bl), a. [in, priv., and recoverable.] That cannot be recovered, restored, or remedied; not recoverable; irreparable. "Irrecoverable misery." Tillotson.
Time, in a natural sense, is irrecoverable. Rogers.
The irrecoverable loss of so many livings of principal value. Hooker.

IR-RĒ-CŌV'ĒR-A-BLE-NĒSS, n. The state of being irrecoverable. Donne.

IR-RĒ-CŌV'ĒR-A-BLY, ad. Beyond recovery.

† IR-RĒ-CŪ'PĒR-A-BLY, ad. Irrecoverably; without hope of recovery. Bulokar.

† IR-RĒ-CŪRED' (ir-rĕ-kārd'), a. Not to be cured. "With irrecured wound." Rous.

IR-RĒ-CŪS'A-BLE, a. [L. irrecusabilis, not to be refused.] Not liable to exception. Wright.

IR-RĒ-DEĒM'A-BLE, a. [It. irredimibile; Sp. irredimible.]

1. That cannot be redeemed. Coleridge.
2. Not to be paid according to the nominal value; as, "An irredeemable paper currency."

IR-RĒ-DEĒM'A-BĪL'I-TY, n. The quality of not being redeemable; irredeemableness. Craig.

IR-RĒ-DEĒM'A-BLE-NĒSS, n. The quality of not being redeemable; irredeemability. Craig.

IR-RĒ-DEĒM'A-BLY, ad. So as not to be redeemed. Blair.

IR-RĒ-DŪ'C-BLE, a. [It. irreduttibile; Sp. irreducible; Fr. irréductible.]

1. Not to be reduced or brought; that cannot be changed into any other state.
These observations seem to argue the corpuscles of air to be irreducible into water. Boyle.

2. (Algebra.) Noting that particular case of a cubic equation in which none of the values of the unknown quantity, though all real, can be obtained by Cardan's formula. Hutton.

IR-RĒ-DŪ'C-BLE-NĒSS, n. The quality of being irreducible. Wright.

IR-RĒ-DŪ'C-BLY, ad. In a manner not reducible.

IR-RĒ-FLĒC'TIVE, a. Not reflective. Whewell.

IR-RĒF'RA-GA-BĪL'I-TY, n. [It. irrefragabilità.] The quality of being irrefragable or irrefutable; indisputableness. Johnson.

† IR-RĒF'RA-GA-BLE (ir-rĕf'ra-ga-bl, S. J. F. Ja. K. Sm. R. Rees; ir-rĕ-frāg'a-bl, P. E. C. Clear and irrefragable demonstrations of truth. Bp. Hall.
"If we might judge by the uniformity we find in our dictionaries, there would be no great difficulty in settling the accentuation of this word. Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Bailey, Entick, W. Johnston, Perry, Barclay, and Buchanan place the accent on the third syllable; Mr. Scott, either on the second or third, with a preference to the latter; and Mr. Sheridan alone places it exclusively on the second. But, notwithstanding Mr. Sheridan's accentuation stands single, I am much mistaken if it has not only the best usage on its side, but the clearest analogy to support it." Walker.

Syn. — See INDUBITABLE.

† IR-RĒF'RA-GA-BLE-NĒSS, n. The quality of being irrefragable. Bailey.

† IR-RĒ-FŪT'A-BLE, or IR-RĒF'U-TA-BLE (ir-rĕ-tūt'a-bl, S. P. Ja. Sm. K. W.; ir-rĕf'ū-ta-bl, J. F. K. C.; ir-rĕ-fūt'a-bl or ir-rĕf'ū-ta-bl, W.), a. [L. irrefutabilis; in, priv., and refuto, to refute; Fr. irréfutable.] That cannot be refuted; unanswerable; indisputable; irrefragable.

That irrefutable discourse of Cardinal Caetan. Bp. Hall.
"All our dictionaries place the accent on the third syllable of this word; nor do I mean to affront such respectable authority by placing it on the second, as in irrefragable, though there is the same reason for both. Let it not be pleaded that we have the verb refute in favor of the first pronunciation; — this has not the least influence on the words indisputable, irrecusable, incomparable, &c." Walker.

† IR-RĒ-FŪT'A-BLY, or IR-RĒF'U-TA-BLY, ad. Without refutation. Walker.

IR-RĒ-ĠĒN'ĒR-A-ŪY, n. Unregeneracy. Wright.

† IR-RĒ-ĠĒN'ĒR-Ā'TIŌN, n. [in, priv., and regeneration.] Unregenerated state. N. E. Elders.

IR-RĒ-Ġ'U-LAR, a. [L. irregularis; in, priv., and regularis, regular; It. irregolare; Sp. irregular; Fr. irrégulier.]

1. Not regular; deviating from rule, custom, or nature; abnormal; anomalous; eccentric.

2. To make an island of.

Beheld it [a mist] rolling on
Under the curling winds, and undulating
The peak whereon we stand. Shelley.

ISLAND-ER (r'land-er), n. An inhabitant of an island. Addison.

ISLAND-Y (r'land-é), a. Full of, or pertaining to, islands. [u.] Cotgrave.

ISLE (ri), n. [L. insula; It. isola; Sp. isla; Fr. île.]

1. An island; a tract of land surrounded by water. "The isles of the sea." Isa. xxiv. 15.

2. (Ent.) A spot of a different color included in a macula. Maunder.

It is sometimes incorrectly written for isle.

ISLET (r'let), n. [Old Fr. islette.] A little island. "Certain desolate islets." Wotton.

IS-MA-E'L-AN, n. (Ecol.) One of a sect of Mahometans. Smart.

IS-NÄR'DI-A, n. (Bot.) A genus of obscure marsh plants. Loudon.

ISQ-BÄRE, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and βαρος, weight.] (Phys. Geog.) An imaginary line connecting together those places on the earth where the mean height of the barometer at the level of the sea is the same. Johnston.

ISQ-BÄR-Q-MÉT'RIC, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, βαρος, weight, and μέτρον, a measure.] (Phys. Geog.) Noting lines on the globe connecting places where there is the same mean difference between the monthly extremes of the barometer. Nichol.

ISQ-CHÍ'MAL, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and χειμῶν, winter.] (Phys. Geog.) Noting lines which connect places on the globe where the mean winter temperature is equal. Nichol.

ISQ-CHÍM'E-NAL, a. Having the same mean winter temperature; isochimal. Ansted.

ISQ-CHÍ'MENE, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and χειμῶν, winter.] (Phys. Geog.) An imaginary line connecting together all the places on the earth which have the same mean winter temperature. Johnston.

ISQ-CHRO-MÁT'IC, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and χρῶμα, color.] (Opt.) Having the same colors; noting rings or curves of the same tint in the double series of colored rings produced by the interference and analysis of polarized light. Herschel.

ISQ-CH'RO-NAL, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and χρόνος, time.] (Mech.) Having equal times; performed in equal times; isochronous. Berkeley.

Isochronal lines, those along which a heavy body descends with a uniform velocity. Brande.

ISQ-CH'RO-NISM, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and χρόνος, time; Fr. isochronisme.] Equality of time, as in the vibration of the pendulum. Hamilton.

ISQ-CH'RO-NÖN, n. An equal time-keeper, or a sort of clock which is designed to keep perfectly equal time. Drielsma.

ISQ-CH'RO-NOÜS, a. [Gr. ἰσχρονοῦς.] Performed in equal times; isochronal. Chambers.

ISQ-CH'ROUS, a. [Gr. ἰσχροός; isos, equal, and χρῶν, color.] (Bot.) Possessing a uniformity of color throughout. Henslow.

ISQ-CLÍ'NAL, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and κλίνα, to incline.] (Phys. Geog.) Having equal inclination; applied to lines connecting places on the globe where the dip or inclination of the magnetic needle is the same. Nichol.

ISQ-D'O-MÖN, n. [Gr. ἰσδομος, built alike; L. isodomos.] (Arch.) A species of ancient walling, in which all the courses were of the same height. Elmes.

ISQ-DY-NÄM'IC, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and δύναμις, power.] (Phys. Geog.) Having equal force; applied to lines connecting places on the globe where magnetic intensity is the same.—See INTENSITY. Sabine.

ISQ-GË-Q-THÉR'MAL, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, γῆ, the earth, and θερμῆ, heat.] (Phys. Geog.) Applied to imaginary lines in the interior of the earth, passing through those places which have the same mean temperature. Mrs. Novemville.

ISQ-GÖN'IC, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and γωνία, an angle.] (Phys. Geog.) Having equal angles; applied to lines on the globe connecting places where the declination of the magnetic needle is the same. Sabine.

ISQ-G'RA-PHY, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and γράφω, to write.] Imitation of handwriting. Am. Ency.

ISQ-HY'E-TÖSE, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and τέρας, rain.] (Phys. Geog.) An imaginary line connecting all those places on the earth where the mean annual quantity of rain is the same; lines of equal annual rain-fall. Johnston.

ISQ-LÄ-BLE, a. (Chem.) Capable of being obtained in a separate state, uncombined with any other substance, as dry nitric acid. Graham.

ISQ-LÄTE (is-q-lät, W. J. F. Sm. W. r.; is-q-lät, Ä. W. b.; r'q-lät, K.), v. a. [It. isolare; isola (L. insula), an island; Fr. isoler, to isolate.] [i. ISOLATED; pp. ISOLATING, ISOLATED.]

1. To place in a detached situation; to detach; to insulate. Latham.

2. (Chem.) To obtain a substance by itself, separate from all its combinations. Graham.

IS'Q-LĀT-ĒD, p. a. (Elec.) See INSULATED.

IS'Q-LĀT-ĒD, a. [It. isolato; Fr. isolé.] Detached; separate; insulated. Wurburton.

IS'Q-LĀT-ĒD-LY, ad. In an isolated manner.

IS-Q-LĀ'TION, n. The state of being isolated; separation. Ed. Rev.

I-SŌL'Q-GŌŪS, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and λόγος, analogy.] (Chem.) Noting groups of compounds the components of any one of which are related to one another, in composition, &c., in a manner similar to that in which the components of each of the others are related to one another. Miller.

I-SQ-MĒ'RĪ-A, n. (Algebra.) A distribution into equal parts. Bailey.

I-SQ-MĒ'RĪC, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and μέρος, a part; (Chem.)] Noting certain compounds which consist of the same elements united in the same proportions, and are yet essentially different in their chemical properties. Daniel.

I-SŌM'Ē-RĪSM, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and μέρος, a part; Fr. isomérie.] (Chem.) The state or the quality of being isomeric; identity in respect to constituent elements and their proportions, and essential difference as to chemical properties. Graham.

I-SQ-MĒ'T'RĪC, } a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and μέτρον, a measure.] Noting a species of projection on a single plane, of great value in the arts, of which the fundamental condition is the following:—If three equal lines lie parallel respectively to three rectangular axes, the single plane must be so chosen that their projections on it shall be equal. Nichol.

I-SQ-MŌR'PHĪSM, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and μορφή, form.] (Chem.) The property or the quality of being isomorphous. Graham.

I-SQ-MŌR'PHŌUS, a. (Chem.) Noting substances which possess the property of crystallizing in forms belonging to the same system, and presenting only slight differences in the absolute value of their angles, and which can replace each other in indefinite proportions, always forming similar crystals. Graham.

I-SŌN'Q-MY, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and νόμος, law; It. isonomia.] Equal law or equal rights. Smart.

I-SQ-PĒR-I-MĒ'T'RĪ-CAL, a. (Geom.) Noting figures which have equal perimeters, and solids bounded by equal surfaces. Davies & Peck.

I-SQ-PĒ-RĪM'Ē-TRY, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, περί, around, and μέτρον, measure.] (Geom.) That branch of higher geometry which treats of the properties and relations of isoperimetrical figures and solids. Davies & Peck.

IS'Q-PŌD, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and πόδι, a foot.] (Zool.) A crustacean, the legs of which are all alike, as the sow-bug. Owen.

IS'Q-PŌD, } a. (Zool.) Relating to an iso-
I-SŌP'Q-DOŪS, } pod; equal-footed. Wright.

IS'Q-PYRE, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and πῦρ, fire.] (Min.) A grayish or black brittle mineral, occasionally spotted red, occurring in masses, and composed of silica, alumina, iron, and lime, with a little copper. Dana.

ISŌS, [Gr. ἴσος, equal.] A prefix signifying equal;—usually contracted to iso.

I-SŌS'CE-LĒS, a. [Gr. ἰσοκέλης; ἴσος, equal, and αἶψα, a leg; It. isoscele; Sp. isosceles; Fr. isocèle.] (Geom.) Having two legs or sides equal, as a triangle. Harris.

I-SQ-STĒM'Q-NOŪS, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and στήμων, στήμων, a thread.] (Bot.) Noting plants the stamens of which are equal in number to the petals. Lindley.

I-SŌTH'Ē-BAL, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and θέρος, summer.] (Phys. Geog.) Noting lines connecting places on the globe which have the same mean summer heat. Nichol.

IS'Q-THERM, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and θεός, summer.] (Phys. Geog.) An imaginary line connecting those places on the earth which have the same mean summer temperature. Johnston.

IS'Q-THERM, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and θερμ, heat.] (Phys. Geog.) An imaginary line connecting together those places on the earth which have the same mean annual temperature. Johnston.

I-SQ-THER'MAL, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and θερμ, heat.] Having equal heat or temperature.

Isothermal lines, imaginary lines which pass through those points, on the surface of the earth, at which the mean annual temperature is the same.—Isothermal zones, spaces on opposite sides of the equator, having the same mean annual temperature, and bounded by corresponding isothermal lines. Brande.

I-SŌTH'Ē-RŌM'BRŌSE, n. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, θέρος, summer, and ὄμβρος, rain.] An imaginary line connecting all those places on the earth where the quantity of summer rain bears the same proportion to the yearly quantity of rain. Johnston.

I-SQ-TŌN'IC, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and τόνος, tone.] Having equal tones. Smart.

I-SŌT'RO-PIC, a. [Gr. ἴσος, equal, and ῥοπή, to turn.] Noting bodies in which the action of elastic forces is alike in all directions. Nichol.

IS'RA-ĒL-ĪTE, n. One descended from Israel, or Jacob; a Jew. John i. 47.

IS'RA-ĒL-ĪT'IC, } a. Pertaining or belonging to IS'RA-ĒL-ĪT'ISH, } Israel; Jewish. Wright.

IS'SU-A-BLE (ish'shu-a-bl), a. Leading to, or producing an issue; relating to an issue or issues. Burrill.

IS'SU-A-BLY, ad. In an issuable manner. "Pleading issuably." Burrill.

IS'SU-ĀNT (ish'y-ant), a. (Her.) Issuing from another, as a charge or bearing. Brande.

IS'SUE (ish'shu), n. [Fr. issue.—See ISSUE, v. n.]

1. The act of passing out; exit; egress or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Ps. lxxviii. 20.

2. Event; consequence; final result; effect; termination; end; conclusion.

Let the issue correspondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprise. Fairfax.

3. A flux or discharge; an evacuation. "An issue of blood." Matt. ix. 20.

4. Progeny; offspring; children; lineal descendants.

Blessed with no male issue to succeed. Dryden.

5. This term [issue] is of very extensive import, in its most enlarged signification, and includes all persons who have descended from a common ancestor. Bowyer.

6. (Med.) A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humors. Wiseman.

7. (Law.) The point or matter depending in suit, on which two parties join and put their cause to trial; a single, certain, and material point issuing out of the allegations of the parties, and consisting, regularly, of an affirmative and negative:—pl. profits of lands or tenements, and profits growing from amercements. Burrill.

8. Issues are divided into issue in law and issue in fact. An issue in law admits all the facts, and rests simply upon a question of law; an issue in fact is one in which the parties disagree as to the existence of the facts, one affirming they exist, and the other denying it. Bowyer.

9. pl. (Mil.) Certain sums of money which are, at stated periods, given to public accountants for public service, and for the honest distribution of which every individual so intrusted is responsible to Parliament; delivery. Mil. Ency.

IS'SUE (ish'shu), v. n. [L. exeo; ex, from, out of, and eo, to go; It. uscire; Fr. issir.] [i. ISSUED; pp. ISSUING, ISSUED.]

1. To come or pass out in any manner; to flow; to emanate; to proceed; to spring; to arise.

Waters issued from a cave. Milton.

Ere Pallas issued from the Thunderer's head. Pope.

2. To proceed or spring as offspring. "Thy sons that shall issue from thee." 2 Kings xx. 18.

3. To be produced, as by a fund. Ayliffe.

4. To end; to terminate; to result.

In what can such a contest issue? Ed. Rev.

5. (Law.) To come to a point in fact or in law, on which the parties join and rest the decision. Wright.

Syn.—See ARISE.

IS'SUE, v. a. 1. To send out; to deliver.

The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temple.

2. To send forth judicially. "The marter issues out commands." Dryden.

IS'SUED (ish'shud), a. Descended. Shak.

IS'SUE-LESS (ish'shu-lēs), a. Having no issue or offspring. "Dying issueless." Carew.

IS'SUE-PĒAS, n. pl. (Med.) Round bodies employed to maintain irritation in an issue or wound in the skin. P. Cyc.

IS'SU-ĒR (ish'shu-er), n. One who issues.

IS'SU-ĪNG (ish'shu-ing), n. The act of passing or going out:—a sending out.

ISTH'MI-AN (ist'mē-an), a. [Gr. ἰσθμός.] Noting, or relating to, certain Grecian games celebrated at the Isthmus of Corinth. Mitford.

ISTH'MUS (ist'mys), n.; pl. ISTHMI. [Gr. ἰσθμός, a neck, an isthmus; L. isthmus.] (Geog.) A neck of land joining a peninsula to the main land, or two parts of a continent or of an island together. Dampier.

IT, pron. [M. Goth. ita; A. S. hit; Dut. het; Ger. es; Dan. det; Sw. det; Icel. það.—L. id.—"The past part, of the Goth. haitan (A. S. hætan), to name; and so equivalent to said." H. Tooke.] [pos. xrs.] A pronoun of the neuter gender, used sometimes to represent the thing spoken of before, sometimes without any definite antecedent; as, "It rains," and sometimes to represent a clause which follows; as, "It is true that he said so."

1. "The pronoun it, as it carries in itself no such idea as that of personality, or sex, or life, is chiefly used with reference to things inanimate; yet the word is, in a certain way, applicable to animals, or even to persons, though it does not, in itself, present them as such. Thus we say, 'It is I,' 'It was they,' 'It was you.' In examples of this kind, the word it is simply demonstrative, meaning the thing or subject spoken of." Gold Brown.

2. "It was applied by our old writers to the masculine and feminine as well as to the neuter, and to the plural as well as singular." Richardson.

3. The earliest known examples of the use of its, the possessive form of the pronoun it, are found in the works of Shakspeare, who uses it in only a very few instances, and who, like other writers of the same age, uses his instead of its. Nor is its found in the common version of the Bible; but thereof, his, and sometimes her, are used instead of it; as, "The fruit-tree yielding fruit after his kind," Gen. i. 11; "If the salt have lost his savor," Matt. v. 13; "The tree of life which yielded her fruit every month," Rev. xxii. 2.

4. "Through the whole of our authorized version of the Bible, its does not once occur; the work which it now performs being accomplished, as our rustics would now accomplish it, by his or her, applied as freely to inanimate things as to persons, or else by thereof or of it. Its occurs, I believe, only three times in all Shakspeare; and I doubt whether Milton has once admitted it into 'Paradise Lost,' although, when that was composed, others freely allowed it." Trench.

5. Dr. Trench is mistaken in supposing that "its occurs only three times in all Shakspeare." It is found at least five times in "Winter's Tale," and once in "Measure for Measure;" and in some editions of Shakspeare there are other instances of its use. Milton has used it in "Paradise Lost" in the following instances:—

The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven. B. I. 254.

For no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness. B. IV. 813.

I-TĀB'Ē-RĪTE, n. (Min.) A granular, slaty rock consisting of specular or magnetic iron and quartz; a variety of hematite. Dana.

I-TA-CŌL'U-MĪTE, n. (Min.) A laminated quartz rock belonging to the talcose series. The diamond generally occurs in regions that afford this mineral. Dana.

I-TA-CŌN'IC, a. (Chem.) Noting a crystallizable acid produced by the decomposition of citric acid by heat. Miller.

I-TĀL'IAN (it-tā'yan), a. (Geog.) Relating to Italy. Italian grape-grass, a plant which produces a coarse kind of seed; Solium italicum. Simmonds.

I-TĀL'IAN, n. (Geog.) 1. A native of Italy.
2. The language of Italy. Bosworth.

†I-TĀL'IAN-ĀTE (it-ā'l'yān-āt), v. a. To make Italian; to Italianize. Wilson.

I-TĀL'IAN-ĪSM, n. [Fr. Italianisme.] An Italian idiom or phrase; to Italianism. Surenne.

I-TĀL'IAN-IZE, v. n. & a. [It. Italianizzare; Fr. Italianiser.] To speak Italian; to play the Italian; — to render Italian. Knights. Cotgrave.

I-TĀL'IC (it-ā'l'ik), a. [L. Italicus; It. & Sp. Itálico; Fr. Italique.] Relating to Italy, but applied particularly to a type sloping towards the right, and usually employed to distinguish words or sentences, or to render them emphatical.

†Italic letters were invented, about the year 1500, by Aldus Manutius, a celebrated printer at Venice, who dedicated them to the states of Italy; whence the name.

I-TĀL'IC, n.; pl. I-TĀL'ICS. An Italic letter or type. "Being printed in Italics." Pope.

I-TĀL'IC-ISM, n. [It. italicismo.] An Italian idiom or phrase. Jodrell.

I-TĀL'IC-IZE, v. a. [i. ITALICIZED; pp. ITALICIZING, ITALICIZED.] To represent in Italic letters; to distinguish by Italics. Dr. Parr.

ITCH, n. [A. S. gictha; Dut. jeuk; Ger. jucken.] 1. An uneasy sensation of the skin, which is eased by scratching.

2. A contagious eruption of very minute pimples, pustular, vesicular, intermixed, and alternating, itching intolerably and terminating in scars; psora. Dunglison.

†The itch occupies, particularly, the spaces between the fingers, the backs of the hands, wrists, elbows, axillæ, groins, hams, &c., and rarely affects the face. It seems to be connected with an insect of the genus Acarus, or Larceptes. Dunglison.

3. A constant teasing desire. "Itch of meddling with other people's matters." L'Estrange. All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

ITCH, v. n. [Dut. jeuken; Ger. jucken.] [i. ITCHED; pp. ITCHING, ITCHED.]

1. To feel an uneasiness in the skin, which is removed by scratching. Wiseman.

2. To long; to have continual desire. If I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shak.

ITCH'ING, n. 1. The state of the skin when one desires to scratch it. "A troublesome itching of the part." Wiseman.

2. Teasing desire; a longing. Good.

ITCH'ING, p. a. 1. Feeling the itch, or an uneasy sensation in the skin, and a desire to scratch it.

2. Having a continual teasing desire; craving.

ITCH'Y, a. Infected with the itch. Donne.

I'TEM, ad. [L., also.] Also. — A word used in catalogues, &c., when any article is added.

Though not a grace appears on strictest search, But that she suits, and item goes to church. Cowper.

I'TEM, n. 1. A new article; a single entry; any thing which might form part of a detail. Shak.

2. A hint; an innuendo. Glanvill.

I'TEM, v. a. To make a memorandum of. I have itemed it in my memory. Addison.

And item down the victims of the past. Cowper.

†IT'ER-ANCE, n. Repetition; iteration. Shak.

IT'ER-ATE, v. a. [L. itero, iteratus; iterum, again; It. iterare; Sp. iterar; Fr. itérer.] [i. ITERATED; pp. ITERATING, ITERATED.] To go over, utter, or do a second time; to repeat.

Adam took no thought, Eating his fall; nor Eve to iterate Her former trespass feared. Milton.

Syn. — See REPEAT.

IT'ER-ATION, n. [L. iteratio; It. iterazione; Sp. iteracion.] Act of iterating; repetition; recital or performance over again; reiteration.

Syn. — See REPETITION.

IT'ER-ATIVE, a. [Sp. iterativo; Fr. itératif.] Repeating; redoubling; iterant. Cotgrave.

IT'IN'ER-AN-CY, n. [L. iter, itineris, a journey.] The act or the habit of travelling; a journey; travel. H. More.

IT'IN'ER-ANT, a. [L. itinerans; Fr. itinérant.] Travelling; wandering; not settled; unsettled. "A judge itinerant." Milton.

IT'IN'ER-ANT, n. One who travels about, particularly an itinerant preacher. Ch. Ob.

IT'IN'ER-ANT-LY, ad. In an itinerant manner; wanderingly. Clarke.

IT'IN'ER-ARY, n. [L. itinerarium; It. & Sp. itinerario; Fr. itinéraire.] A book of travels; a guide for travelling. Addison.

IT'IN'ER-ARY, a. [L. itinerarius; It. & Sp. itinerario; Fr. itinéraire.] Relating to travel; travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place. "An itinerary circuit." Bacon. "Itinerary preaching." Milton.

IT'IN'ER-ATE, v. n. [L. itineror, itineratus; iter, a journey.] [i. ITINERATED; pp. ITINERATING, ITINERATED.] To journey; to travel. Cockerham.

IT'IN'ER-AT-ING, n. The practice of travelling from place to place; a journeying. Wright.

ITS, neuter pron. Possessive case from it. — See IT.

IT-SELF, pron. [it and self.] The neuter reciprocal pronoun of it. — See IT.

ITT'NER-ITE, n. (Min.) A bluish or ash-gray mineral, occurring crystallized in rhombic decahedrons, and massive. Eng. Cyc.

IT'TRI-A, n. See YTRIA.

IT'TRI-UM, n. See YTRIUM.

I-Ū'LI-DAN, n. (Zool.) One of a family of myriapods, of which the genus Iulus, or galley-worm, is the type. Brande.

-IVE. [L. -ivus.] A termination of many English adjectives. — "Adjectives in ive ought always to have an active signification, otherwise they are improper." Tooke.

I'VIED (i'vid), a. Overgrown with ivy. Warton.

I'VO-RY, n. [Sansc. ivha, an elephant. — L. ebur; It. avorio; Fr. ivoire.] The bony matter of the tusks and teeth of the elephant, the hippopotamus, wild boar, several species of the genus Phoca, the horn or tooth of the narwhal, &c.

"Ivory is less brittle than bone, and of a beautifully uniform texture, admitting of turning in the lathe and receiving a high polish. It consists of about 24 per cent. animal matter resembling horn, and 66 of phosphate, with a trace of carbonate of lime. The ivory of the elephant is most esteemed, and that obtained in the largest quantity." Brande.

Vegetable ivory is the hard albumen of the seed of Phytolophus macrocarpa, a small tree, found in New Granada and the isthmus of Darien, resembling the palm, and formerly referred to the palm family, but now distinguished as a separate order. The liquid contained in its fruit is at first clear and insipid, and is used by travellers to allay thirst; it afterwards becomes milky and sweet, and finally solid and white, and almost as hard as ivory. From it, in this state, toys and other small articles, of a beautiful texture, are made by the turner. Lindley.

I'VO-RY, a. Made of, prepared from, or like, ivory.

I'VO-RY-BLACK, n. A fine, black powder, prepared by burning and grinding ivory. Booth.

I'VO-RY-NUT, n. The fruit of the Phytolophus macrocarpa, the solidified liquid of which constitutes vegetable ivory. — See IVORY.

I'VY (i've), n. [A. S. ifig; Ger. epheu.] (Bot.) A genus of plants most of the species of which are evergreen creepers. The common English ivy, Hedera helix, is much used for ornamental purposes. Loudon.

†The ivy was sacred to Bacchus, and he was sometimes represented with his head encircled with a wreath of it. W. Smith.

I'VY-BERRY, n. The fruit of the ivy. Booth.

I'VY-MAN'TLED (-tld), a. Encircled with ivy. "Yonder ivy-mantled tower." Gray.

IX'O-LYTE, n. [Gr. ixos, birdlime, and lyeo, to dissolve.] (Min.) A mineral, of a greasy lustre, found in bituminous coal. Dana.

IZ'ZARD, n. Another name of the letter z.

J.

J a consonant, and the tenth letter of the alphabet, has till within the last century been identified with the vowel i, and mingled with it in all the English dictionaries, as it still is in many of them. It has invariably the same sound, that of g soft as in giant, as jet, just; except in the word hallelujah. I was formerly used in words where j is now written; and in contractions, i is still sometimes used for j; thus, I. H. S., instead of J. H. S. (Jesus Hominum Salvator, Jesus the Saviour of men.)

JĀB'BER, v. n. [Dut. gabberen; — It. gabbaro, to jeer; Fr. gaber, to jeer; jaboter, to gabble.] [i. JABBBERED; pp. JABBERING, JABBBERED.] To talk rapidly, indistinctly, or idly; to chatter; to prattle; to prate; to gabble. Swift.

JĀB'BER, v. a. To speak or utter indistinctly; as, "To jabber French." Addison.

1. The act of judging; the operation of the mind in comparing its ideas, or in examining facts, in order to ascertain truth. Locke.

2. The power of judging; the faculty of the mind by which a man is enabled to form just conclusions or correct opinions; penetration; discernment; understanding; capacity; good sense; discrimination; intelligence.

Invention is the talent of youth; judgment, of age. Swift.

'T is with our judgment as our watches; none
Go just alike, yet each believes his own. Pope.

3. The result or conclusion of one who judges; determination; decision; opinion; notion.

One of the most important distinctions of our judgments is, that some of them are intuitive, others grounded on argument. Reid.

4. (Fine Arts.) The faculty of selecting that which is most suitable to the purpose. Brande.

5. (Law.) The sentence of the law pronounced by the court upon any matter contained in the record, or in any case tried by the court.

In the Scriptures, judgment is used in different senses, which may generally be determined by the connection.

1. The faculty of discerning right and wrong.
Give the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness to the king's son. Ps. lxxii. 2.

2. The decision or award of a judge.
And all Israel heard of the judgment which the king had judged. 1 Kings iii. 28.

3. The sentence of a judge; punishment for a crime or for sin.

Whoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment. Matt. v. 21.

Judgments are prepared for scorners. Prov. xix. 20.

4. Justice; equity; as, "To do justice and judgment." Gen. xviii. 19.

9. Opinion. "I give my judgment." 1 Cor. vii. 25.

That ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and the same judgment. 1 Cor. i. 10.

10. Final doom. "He hath reserved . . . unto the judgment of the great day." Jude 6.

The following words, abridgment, acknowledgment, and judgment, are to be found, with the orthography here given, in the English dictionaries which preceded the publication of Mr. Todd's improved edition of Dr. Johnson's Dictionary. Todd altered Johnson's orthography of these words by the insertion of an e, thus, abridgement, acknowledgement, judgement; and he remarks, "Several authors have revived this orthography, retaining the e to soften, as Lowth observes on judgement, the preceding g, and as Johnson himself analogically writes lodgement."

The English dictionaries of Jameson and Smart, which have appeared since the publication of Todd's edition of Johnson, also retain the e; and Smart remarks, in relation to the three words in question, that "Todd restores the e in order that they may not exhibit the otherwise unexampled irregularity of g soft before a consonant;" and he "adopts the more correct, however less usual, spelling," and in his Grammar he says, "It is certainly better to write judgement, abridgement, acknowledgement, &c., than judgment, &c., since, by the general laws of pronunciation, g is hard in terminating a syllable." Many respectable writers now insert the e in these words. The omission of it, however, has been hitherto, and still continues to be, the prevailing usage; but it is perhaps not very improbable that the more consistent orthography may yet be generally adopted.

Syn.—See DISCERNMENT.

6. Notice; cognizance.

A state's anger should not take Knowledge either of fools or women. B. Jonson.

7. Sexual intercourse; as, "Carnal knowledge."

"Scarcely any word has occasioned more alteration among verbal critics than this. A great appearance of propriety seems to favor the second pronunciation, till we observe a great number of similar words where the long vowel in the simple is shortened in the compound; and then we perceive something like an idiom of pronunciation, which, to correct, would, in some measure, obstruct the current of the language. To preserve the simple without alteration in the compound, is certainly a desirable thing in language; but when the general tune of the language, as it may be called, crosses this analogy, we may depend on the rectitude of general custom, and ought to acquiesce in it. That the secondary accent shortens the vowel, which was long in the original, appears throughout the language in proclamation, provocation, &c. That the primary accent does the same in preface, prelate, prelude, &c., is evident; and, as ledge is no general termination of our own, which is applicable to several words, why should we not consider knowledge as a simple, and pronounce it independently on its original quantity? The patrons for the first pronunciation are Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, Mr. Barclay, Mr. Elphinstone, and Mr. Scott; and for the second, W. Johnston and Mr. Buchanan." Walker.

Syn.—Knowledge is a very general term, signifying merely the act of knowing, or the thing known. Science, learning, literature, and erudition are more definite terms, and denote high degrees of knowledge, qualified by some collateral idea. Science is knowledge on some subject methodically digested and arranged; as, "The science of mathematics, of astronomy, of chemistry," &c. The phrase a man of knowledge is very indefinite; but the phrases a man of science and a man of literature, or of erudition, are much more definite. —See LITERATURE.

LÄN'GUAGE (läng'gwä), 82, n. [It. linguaggio, from L. lingua, the tongue; Sp. lenguage; Port. linguagem; Fr. langage.]

1. That which the tongue utters or speaks; the expression of thoughts and feelings by means of the articulate sounds of the voice; oral speech.

The first aim of language was to communicate our thoughts; the second, to do it with despatch. Tanke.

2. The expression of thoughts and feelings by means of sensible signs not articulate, whether suggested by nature, or formed by skill and invention; as, "Written language"; "The language of the deaf and dumb."

The language of the eyes frequently supplies the place of that of the tongue. Crabb.

3. The speech peculiar to a nation or people.

Not to know the language I have lived in Shak.
And the love of our own language, what is it, in fact, but the love of our country expressing itself in one particular direction? Trench.

The languages of Europe are usually arranged into five divisions, the Celtic, the Teutonic, the Slavonic, the Latin, and Finnish; of one or the other of which each particular tongue is merely a dialect. Booth.

4. A nation or people, as distinguished by their speech.

All people, nations, and languages trembled. Dan. v. 10.

5. The manner of expression in speaking or writing; the general character or style of speaking or writing; style.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for dress. Pope.
Science is constantly teaching to describe known facts in new language; but the language of Scripture is always the same. Whevell.

6. The words, terms, and phrases peculiar to a science, trade, or profession; as, "Law-language"; "The language of chemistry"; "The language of sailors."

Syn.—Language is a very general term, and is not strictly confined to utterance by words, as it is also expressed by the countenance, by the eyes, and by signs, as the language of the deaf and dumb; and we say the language not only of men, but also of beasts and birds. Tongue refers especially to an original language; as, "The Hebrew tongue." The modern languages are derived from the original tongues. Speech is the utterance of articulate sounds, and contemplates language as broken or cut into words of different kinds; as, "The parts of speech"; "The gift of speech." Every language has its peculiar idioms. A dialect is an incidental part or a peculiar form of a language, used by the inhabitants of particular districts. The Greek language; the Greek idiom; the Attic dialect. A dead language; native or vernacular language; mother tongue; vulgar tongue; elegant or good language or style.—Language, terms, and words are sometimes used indifferently, as when it is said an opinion is delivered in plain terms, words, or language.

LĀ'TRI-A [lā'trē-ā, S. IV. P. J. F. Jr. C.; lā'trī-ā, Sm. Ash, Johnson, Wr.; lā'trē-ā, K.], n. [L., from Gr. λατρεία; λατρεύω, to serve.] (Roman Catholic Church.) Worship paid only to God, as distinguished from dulia, worship paid to saints. Stillingfleet.
"This word, by being derived from the Greek λατρεία, is pronounced by Johnson, and after him by Ash, with the accent on the penultimate syllable. Both of them had forgot their Greek in the word dulia, which they accent on the antepenultimate, though derived from δουλεύω. One of these modes of accentuation must be wrong; and my opinion is, that, as these words are appellatives, we should adopt that accent which Dr. Johnson did when his Greek was out of his head; that is, the antepenultimate." Walker.

LĀT'RO-BITE, n. (Min.) A silicate of alumina, of a pale rose-red color and vitreous lustre, from Amitok, an island near the coast of Labrador; — so named from having been discovered by Latrobe. Dana.

Soft on her lap her laureate son reclines. Pope.

Poet-laureate, the title of the court-poet in England.

The appellation "laureate" seems to have been derived, through the Italian, from the Latin laurus, "a bay," in allusion to the ancient practice of crowning poets. Petrarch received the crown at Rome in 1341, and Tasso in 1594. The earliest mention of a poet-laureate in England, under that express title, is in the reign of Edward IV., when John Kay received the appointment. — See LAUREATION. P. Cye.

 1. A rule of action laid down or prescribed by a superior.
 He [God] gave a law to angels, which some of them kept, and have been confirmed in a state of obedience to it, but which others broke, and thereby plunged themselves into destruction. Buck.
 2. A rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state, particularly by the legislative power;—called also, by way of distinction, municipal or positive law.
 "The laws of a state are more usually understood to mean the rules and enactments promulgated by the legislative authority thereof, or long-established local customs having the force of laws." Story.
 The first maxim of a free state is, that the laws be made by one set of men and administered by another. In other words, that the legislative and judicial characters be kept separate. Paley.
 Laws, considered singly, have been divided into numerous species, as declaratory, remedial, penal, repealing, &c. P. Cyc.
 3. One of the rules or principles by which any thing is regulated or conducted; a regulation. "The laws of the turf." "The laws of chess." P. Cyc.
 4. A body of rules, or all the rules applicable to a given subject; as, "The Roman law."
 The law of England has been chiefly formed out of the principles of natural justice by a long series of judicial decisions. St. J. Macdonald.
 5. The constant and regular mode or order according to which an energy or agent acts or operates; as, "The laws of motion"; "The law of gravitation."
 "When a fact, frequently observed, recurs invariably under the same circumstances, we compare it to an act which has been prescribed, to an order which has been established, and say it occurs according to law." Fleming.
 A law presupposes an agent; this is only the mode according to which an agent proceeds; it implies a power, for it is the order according to which that power acts. Without this agent, without this power, which are both distinct from itself, the law does nothing, is nothing. Paley.
 The laws of nature are the rules according to which effects are produced, but there must be a cause which operates according to these rules. The rules of navigation never existed as a ship, nor the law of gravity never moved a planet. Rid.
 All beings have their laws: the Deity has his law, the material world has its law, superior intelligences have their law, the beasts have their laws, and man has his laws. Montesquieu.
 6. The code of laws given by Moses to the Jews, contained principally in the last four books of the Pentateuch, as distinguished from the Prophets and from the Gospel; Mosaic law.

LĒES (lɛz), n. sing. & pl. [Fr. lie. — From Low L. lia, lees; from L. limus, mud. Du Cange.] From A. S. hycan, to lie. Richardson.] The grosser part of a liquid, which settles at the bottom; dregs; sediment.
 The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees is left this vault to bug off. Shak.
SYN. — See DREGS.
†LĒESE, v. a. [A. S. lysan, leasan. — See LOSE.]
 To lose. "He that findeth his life shall leese it." Matt. x. 29, Wickliffe's Trans.
†LĒESE, v. a. [L. ledeo, lesus.] To hurt; to ruin or destroy. "The princes of the people sought to leese him." Wickliffe.
LĒET, n. [A. S. leth, leth, a territorial division, a lathe; latian, to assemble. Covell. Richardson.] (Eng. Law.) A court of record, held once or twice a year within a hundred, lordship, or manor, for the preservation of the peace and the punishment of trivial misdemeanors; view of frank-pledge; court-leet. Wishaw.
 Its original intent was to view the frank-pledges, that is, the freemen of the liberty who anciently were all pledges for the good behavior of each other. It has, however, latterly fallen into almost total desuetude. Burrill.
†LĒET'-ALE, n. A dinner or feast at the time of leet. [England.] Warton.
LĒE'WARD (lɛ'wɔrd or lɛ'wɔrd) [lɛ'wɔrd, W. P. J. E. P. Ja. W. W. b.; lɛ'wɔrd or lɛ'wɔrd, K. Sm.; lɛ'wɔrd, S.], n. (Naut.) The lee side; — opposed to windward.
 To the leeward, or to leeward, in a direction opposite to that from which the wind blows.
 The opposite of lee is weather, and of leeward is windward; the first two being adjectives." Dana.
||LĒE'WARD, a. (Naut.) Lee. [R.]
 By change of wind to leeward side. Swift.
LĒE'WAY, n. (Naut.) The deviation of a course actually run by a vessel from the course steered upon, caused by drifting to leeward, as when sailing close-hauled with but a part of her sails set. It is the angle which the line of the ship's keel makes with the line which she actually describes through the water. Dana. Brande.
†LĒFE. See LEEF, and LIEF. Wright.
LĒFT, i. & p. from leave. See LEAVE.
 On or to the left, or the left hand, in a direction from the left side; nearer the left side than the right side; as, "To turn to the left"; "To pass on the left." "He ... put five [slavers] on the right hand and five on the left." 2 Chron. iv. 8. — Over the left shoulder, or over the left, contrariwise. "What the Protestant religion gets by lives and fortunes spent in the service

“The left hand,” says Horne Tooke, “is that which is learned, lear’ed, left, or which we are taught to leave out of use when one hand only is employed.” This etymology is adopted by Richardson and Trench.

LEFT’-HÄND’ED, a. 1. Having greater facility in the use of the left than of the right hand; habitually using the left hand rather than the right.

1. A book formerly used at divine service in the Roman Catholic church, containing a record of the lives of saints and martyrs. Brande.

2. A fictitious or doubtful narrative, as of the exploits of heroes; a fable; a myth. Bentley.

3. Any narrative, memorial, relation, or record. “The whole legend of love.” Steele.

4. (Numismatics.) The motto round the field of a coin or a medal, near the edge; — opposed to inscription, which is written across it. Brande.

Golden legend, a collection of the lives of saints, made in the thirteenth century, and used by the Roman Catholic church for two hundred years. Brande.

“This word is sometimes pronounced with the vowel in the first syllable short, as if written lĒd-jend. This has the feeble plea of the Latin word lego to produce, but with what propriety can we make this plea for a short vowel, in English, when we pronounce that very vowel long in the Latin word we derive it from? The genuine and ancient analogy of our language, as Dr. Wallis observes, is, when a word of two syllables has the accent on the first, and the vowel is followed by a single consonant, to pronounce the vowel long. It is thus we pronounce all Latin words of this kind; and in this manner we should certainly have pronounced all our English words, if an affectation of following Latin quantity had not disturbed the natural progress of pronunciation. But, besides this analogy, the word in question has the authority of Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Bailey, Entick, Perry, and Buchanan, on its side. Dr. Kenrick and Dr. Ash are the only abettors of the short sound.” Walker.

|| LĒ’GEND, v. a. To narrate in a legend. Hall.

|| LĒG’EN-DÄ-RY [lĒd’jen-dä-rĕ, W. P. E. K. Sm.; lĒ’jen-dä-rĕ, Ja. C. W. r.], n. [It. leggendario; legenda, a legend, Sp. legendario, Fr. légendaire.]

1. A book containing legends of saints; a legend. — See LEGEND, No. 1. Cockerham.

2. A writer or relater of legends. Sheldon.

“As the preceding word has, by the clearest analogy, the vowel in the first syllable long, so this word, by having the accent higher than the antepenultimate, has as clear an analogy for having the same vowel short.” Walker.

|| LĒG’EN-DÄ-RY, a. 1. Of, or pertaining to, a legend or legends. “Legendary writers.” Lloyd.

2. Partaking of the nature of a legend; fabulous; romantic. “Legendary stories.” Bourne.

C.*; lē'jis-lā-tur, Ja.; lēd-jis-lā-tur, P.], n. [It. & Sp. legislatura; Fr. legislature.] The legislative body in a state; the body or bodies in a state in which is vested the power of making laws.

In Great Britain, the legislature consists of the sovereign, lords, and commons, whose joint consent is indispensable to the making of any law. In the more important English colonial establishments, it consists of a governor and council appointed by the home government, and an assembly or house, the members of which are elected by the people, as in the Canadas, in New Brunswick, and in the English West Indies. In most of the states of the American Union, the legislature consists of the governor and two branches or houses, all elected by the people. The national legislature of the United States is styled Congress, and consists of the president, the Senate, and the House of Representatives. Brande. Ency. Am.

"Some respectable speakers in the House of Commons pronounce the e in the first syllable of this word long, as if written legislature, and think they are wonderfully correct in doing so, because the first syllable of all Latin words, compounded of lex, is long." Walker.

We sometimes hear this word pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, lē-gis-lā-ture (also legislative, lē-gis-lā-tive), a mode which is not countenanced by any of the orthoepists.

LĒ'GIST, n. [It. & Sp. legista, Fr. légiste.] One skilled in law; a lawyer. Bacon.

A motive to the invention of new words is the desire thereby to cut short lengthy explanations, tedious circuits of language. Trench.

3. This word is much used in the United States, especially as a colloquial word; and it is generally considered as of American origin. It is to be found in the writings of Jared Ingersoll (1765), Washington, Jefferson, and Hamilton, though most of our best writers forbear it. It has, however, within a few years, been considerably used in England, and has been countenanced by some distinguished English writers, as Bishop Jebb, Lord Byron, Dr. Dibdin, Mr. Coleridge, John Foster, Dr. Arnold, Dr. Latham, Dr. Trench, Professor Powell, &c.; also by the Brit. Crit., Ch. Ob., Ed. Rev., Qu. Rev., For. Qu. Rev., Ec. Rev., Gent. Mag., Blackwood's Mag., Sat. Mag., P. Cyc., &c. It has also been admitted into the recent English dictionaries of Knowles, Smart, Reid, Craig, Ogilvie, and Boag; yet Smart says of it, "The word is an Americanism."

LĒSS'ER, a. Less; smaller; inferior; minor.

The larger here, and there the lesser lambs.
 The new-fallen young hard blowing for their duns. Pope.

My Lesser means smaller, and contrasts with greater.
 or. Less contrasts sometimes with greater, but oftener with more, the comparative of much; for though it may mean not so large, its most common meaning is not so much. G. Brown.

Lesser is a corruption of less, the comparative of little, of long and established use in certain cases; as, "Lesser Asia," for "Asia Minor"; "The lesser light." Gen. i. 16. "Lesser graces." Blair. — It may be used instead of less whenever the rhythm can be aided, or the double occurrence of a terminational avoided; as,
 Attend to what a lesser Muse indites. Addison.

† LĒSS'ER, ad. Less. "That lesser hate him." Shak.

No one Swells like the boom of a man set free! A wilderness is rich with liberty. Wordsworth.

2. (Met.) Freedom of the will; exemption from compulsion or restraint in volition.

Sp. — "The idea of liberty is the idea of a power in any agent to do or forbear any particular action, according to the determination or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other." Locke. — "By the liberty of a moral agent, I understand a power over the determinations of his own will. If, in any action, he has power to will what he did, or not to will it, in that action he is free. But if, in every voluntary action, the determination of his will be the necessary consequence of something involuntary in the state of his mind, or of something in his external circumstances, he is not free; he has not what I call the liberty of a moral agent, but is subject to necessity." Reid. — "It has been common to distinguish liberty into freedom from co-action, and freedom from necessity. Freedom from co-action implies, on the one hand, the absence of all impediment or restraint, and, on the other hand, the absence of all compulsion or violence. Freedom from necessity is also called liberty of election, or power to choose, and implies freedom from any thing invincibly determining a moral agent." Fleming.

3. (Eng. Law.) A privilege or immunity held by royal grant or by prescription; a branch of the crown's prerogative subsisting in the hands of a subject; a franchise. Whishaw.

That by which objects are rendered perceptible to the sight; the medium of vision.

The seven lamps shall give light. Numb. viii. 2. Light spends about seven or eight minutes of an hour in passing from the sun to the earth. Newton.

2. There are two theories of light; viz., the Newtonian or corpuscular theory, or theory of emanation or emission, and the undulatory theory, or theory of undulations. According to the former, light consists of particles of matter emitted or projected from a luminous body with a velocity of 120,000 miles per second. According to the latter, all space is filled with a rare, subtle, and elastic medium, or ether, which is thrown into undulations by a luminous body, as the atmosphere by a sonorous body, and as the undulations reach the eye, they affect it with the sense of sight. The undulatory theory is now generally adopted by men of science. Solar light is composed of seven different colors; namely, violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange, and red. Brande. Nichol.

3. "Light," according to Lucretius (On the Nature of Things), "is but a polar tension of ether, evoked by a central body in antagonism with the planets, and heat is the motion of this ether." — A doctrine which has never been so generally adopted, and the correctness of which experiment is every day confirming. London Athenaeum.

4. The distinctive dress given by noblemen, &c., to their pages, lackeys, and other servants.

5. The distinctive dress of a class. P. Cyc.

6. The body of ferrymen in London. Johnson.

What livery is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that is, allowance of horse-meat, as to keep horses at livery, the which word, I guess, is derived from linering or deliv'ring forth their nightly food. So in great houses the livery is said to be served up for all night. And the livery is also the upper weed which a servant man wears, so called, as I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. Spenser.

Livery of seisin, (Law.) a delivery of possession of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, to a person entitled to the same. Bouverie.—To sue one's livery, to institute a suit as an heir, to obtain possession of lands that have been seized by the count of wards on the death of any tenant of the crown.

LŌAD (lŏd), n. [A. S. hlād, lad; hladan, to load. —See LADE.]

1. That which is laid or put on or in for conveyance; a burden; cargo; lading; freight.

Then on his back he laid the precious load,

And sought his wonted shelter. Dryden.

2. Any thing that weighs down, burdens, or depresses; weight; pressure; encumbrance. "Load of sorrow." Shak. "Load of guilt."

3. The quantity a person can eat or drink. [R.] There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought till they have laid all their cares to rest with the bottle. L'Estrange.

4. The charge of a gun. Simmonds.

5. (Mech.) The quantity of work done by a steam engine or other machine when working at its full power. Ogilvie.

6. (Mining.) A metallic or mineral vein;—commonly written load.—See LODE. Carew.

Syn.—See BURDEN.

LŌAD (lŏd), v. a. [Goth. hlathan; A. S. hladan. —See LADE.] [i. LOADED; pp. LOADING, LOADED, LADEN, or LOADEN.—Loaden is now very rarely used.]

1. To lay or put a load or burden on or in, particularly for conveyance; to freight.

No journey of a Sabbath-day, and loaded so. Milton.

2. To weigh down; to burden; to encumber; as, "To load the stomach with food."

If that makes no reflections upon what he reads only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit, in winter nights, for the entertainment of others. Locke.

3. To charge, as a gun. Wiseman.

That now the pilot can no loadstar see. Spenser.

LŌAD'STONE (lŏd'stōn), n. [lead and stone.—See LEAD.] An ore of iron which has the property of attracting iron; the natural magnet.—See MAGNET. Brande.

Loadstar and loadstone are very often written loadstar and loadstone; but the preference is given in the English dictionaries to loadstar and loadstone. The dictionaries of Crabb, Brande, and Ure, and the P. Cyc., give only the form of loadstone. Johnson gives the form of loadstar and loadstone, but says, "More properly loadstar and loadstone." Richardson gives load and loadstone; but says, "Now more commonly written load;—loadstone, a leading stone, the stone that leads, guides, or directs." Smart says, "Loadstone is not better even on etymological grounds, and is less usual." Load, however, in the sense of a vein in mining, is perhaps better authorized than load; and it is the orthography given by Brande, Ure, &c.

LŌAF (lŏf), n.; pl. LŌAVES. [Goth. hlaifs, or hlaihs; A. S. hlaf; Old Ger. hlaiβ; Ger. laib, laib, or leib; Sw. lef.—Low L. leibo, or libo.—The past part. of Goth. hlaiβjan, to raise; A. S. hlifan. H. Tooke.]

1. The act of locating, or the state of being located; situation with respect to place; place. Any determinate location or position of the body. Pearson.

To say that the world is somewhere means no more than that it does exist — this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location. Locke.

2. (Law.) A letting for hire; — in American law, the ascertaining and marking out of the bounds of a particular tract of land upon the land itself according to a description in an entry, grant, map, &c. Burrill.

3. That which is located; land set off or surveyed. [U. S.] Bartlett.

LÔEH (lôh), n. [A. S. löh; Gael. loch; Ir. lough.]

1. An arm of the sea. [Scotland.] Across one of the lochs . . . or arms of the sea. Bonnett.

2. A lake, as, "Loch Lomond." [Scotland.] Jamieson.

LÔCH, n. [Fr. loch, loch. — From Arab. laonak, a potion. Landais.] (Med.) A medicine to allay cough; a lambative or linctus; — written also loche, lochock, and looch. Dunglison.

LQ-CHÄ'BER-ÄXE, n. A large-sized halbert or pole-axe, used by the Scottish Highlanders, having a strong hook on the back for laying hold on the object assaulted. Jamieson.

LÔEH'AGE, n. [Gr. λοχαγός; λόχος, a body of soldiers, and ἀγω, to lead.] (Grecian Ant.) The commander of a band of foot-soldiers, called a lochus, the number in which varied at different periods. Mitford.

LQ-CHÄ'A, or LÔ'CHÄ-A, n. pl. [Gr. τὰ δόχεια; δόχος, relating to childbirth.] (Med.) Scious and sanguineous discharges after delivery. Dunglison.

LÔ'CHÄ-AL, a. [Fr.] Pertaining to lochia. Loudon.

LÖCK, n. [A. S. loc, an enclosure, a lock; Dut. slot, a lock; Ger. schloss; Dan. lukke, an enclosure; laas, a lock; Sw. lås, a lock; Icel. laka.]

1. Any thing that fastens, — particularly an instrument having one or more bolts moved by a key, used for fastening doors, drawers, chests, &c.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in locks in contriving their wards or guards. Mason.

2. That part of a gun by means of which fire is communicated to the charge. Grew.

3. A grapple; a hug. "Locks and gripes of wrestling." Milton.

4. A place shut in; an enclosure; a lock-up. Sergeant, eager with his beak to press
Betwixt the rival galley and the lock,
Shuts up the unwieldy centaur in the lock. Dryden.

5. A work erected to confine and raise the water of a river or canal; a dam. Francis.

6. An enclosure having gates at each end in a canal or at a dam, for raising or lowering vessels from one level to another. Brande.

LÖCK, n. [A. S. loce, loca; Ger. locke; Dut. & Dan. lok; Sw. lock; Icel. lockr.] A quantity of wool, hair, or other like substance hanging or clinging together; a tuft.

Not all the tresses that fur head can boast,
Shall draw such envy as the lock you lost. Pope.

LÖCK, v. a. [Goth. lukan; A. S. lucan; Dan. lukke.] [i. LOCKED; pp. LOCKING, LOCKED.]

1. To fasten or close fast, as with a lock; to shut; to close. "Locking every door." Dryden.

Death blasts his bloom, and locks his frozen eyes. Gay.

2. To confine or exclude, by fastening that which closes the opening or entrance; as, "To lock money in a box."

3. To join or unite firmly, as by intertwining or infolding; as, "To lock arms."

4. To encircle; to enclose; to clasp; as, "To lock one in the arms."

5. To furnish with locks, as a canal. Smart.

To lock up, to close or fasten with a lock; — to confine, to restrain.

LÖCK, v. n. 1. To become fast. Doubly departed, it [door] did lock and close. Spenser.

2. To unite by mutual insertion. "They lock into each other." Boyle.

LÖCK'AGE, n. 1. The construction of, or materials for constructing, locks in canals; a lock.

2. Toll for passing the locks of a canal. Clarke.

3. The quantity of water necessary for filling a lock, and passing a vessel through it. Clarke.

4. The amount of elevation and descent made by the locks of a canal. Maurnder.

LÖCK'-CHÄM-BER, n. The interior of a canal-lock; space between two lock-gates. Francis.

LÖCKED'-JÄW (lôkt'jâw), n. (Med.) Spasmodic closure of the lower jaw; a form of tetanus confined to the muscles of the jaws; trismus; — called also lock-jaw. Dunglison.

LÖCK'ER, n. 1. He who, or that which, locks.

2. Any thing closed with a lock, as a chest, a drawer, a cupboard, &c.

Boatswain's locker, (Naut.) a chest in which are kept tools and small stuff for working on rigging. — Chain-locker, a chest in which the chain cables are kept. — Shot-locker, a frame of plank near the pumpwell in the hold, in which the shot are kept. Mar. Dict.

LÖCK'ET, n. [Fr. loquet.]

1. A little lock; a catch or spring which fastens a necklace or other small ornament. Hudibras.

2. A little case worn as an ornament, often containing a lock of hair, or a miniature. Smart.
 3. The hook of a sword scabbard. [Local, Eng.] Wright.
 LÖCK'IST, n. A follower of John Locke in metaphysical philosophy. Stewart.
 LÖCK'JÄW, n. (Med.) Spasmodic closure of the under jaw. — See LOCKED-JAW.
 LÖCK'-KEËP-ER, n. One who attends the locks of a canal. Wright.
 LÖCK'LESS, a. Destitute of locks. Byron.
 LÖCK'-PÄD-DLE, n. A small sluice that serves to fill and empty the locks of a canal. Wright.
 LÖCK'RAM, n. A kind of coarse linen. Shak.
 LÖCK'RAND, n. (Masonry.) A course of bond stones, or a bonding course. Weale.
 LÖCK'RON, n. (Bot.) A species of Ranunculus; — called also golden knap or nep. Johnson.
 LÖCK'-SILL, n. An angular piece of timber, against which the gates shut at the bottom of a lock. Wright.
 LÖCK'SMITH, n. A man whose trade it is to make locks. Fotherby.
 LÖCK'-ÜP, n. A room or place in which persons under arrest are temporarily confined. Hale.
 † LÖCK'Y, a. Having locks or tufts. Sherwood.
 LÖ'CO-ÖES'SION (lö'ko-sesh'un), n. [L. locus, loco, a place, and cessio, a yielding.] [Law.] A yielding or giving place. Crabb.
 LÖ'CO-DE-SCRIP'TIVE, a. [L. locus, loco, a place, and Eng. descriptive.] Descriptive of a particular place or places. Maunder.
 LÖ'CÖ-FÖ'CÖ, a. ["Probably from L. loco foci, instead of a fire." Brande.] Noting a kind of match, — otherwise called lucifer, — prepared with some explosive compound, as of phosphorus, sulphur, and nitre. Brande.
 LÖ'CÖ-FÖ'CÖ, n. 1. A lucifer match. Brande.
 2. A cant term applied to a member of the democratic party in the U. S. — It originated from an incident which took place in Tammany Hall, in the city of N. York, in 1835. Hammond.
 LÖ-CÖ-MÖ'TION, n. [L. locus, a place, and motio, motion; moreo, motus, to move; It. locomozione; Sp. locomoción; Fr. locomotion.] The act, or the power, of moving from place to place; motion from place to place. Browne.
 LÖ-CÖ-MÖ'TIVE, a. [It. locomotivo; Fr. locomotif.]
 1. Of or pertaining to locomotion. Arbutnot.
 2. That moves or has the power to move from place to place; as, "A locomotive engine."
 LÖ-CÖ-MÖ'TIVE, n. [It. locomotiva; Fr. locomotif.] A steam engine supported on wheels, made to draw or to propel a train of railway carriages, and travelling with the load which it carries. "The power of locomotives." Brande.
 LÖ-CÖ-MÖ'TIVE-NESS, n. Locomotivity. Clarke.
 LÖ-CÖ-MQ-TIV'ITY, n. Locomotion. Bryant.
 LÖC'U-LÄ-MËNT, n. [L. loculamentum, a case or box; loculus, dim. of locus, a place.] (Bot.) The partition or cell of a seed-vessel. Landon.
 LÖC'U-LÄR, a. [Fr. loculaire, from L. loculus, a cell; locus, a place.] (Bot.) Pertaining to a cell, as of an ovary. Gray.
 LÖC'U-LJ-CI'DÄL, a. [L. loculus, a cell, and cedo, to cut.] (Bot.) Noting a dehiscence through the middle of the back of each loculament or cell along the dorsal nerve. Gray.
 LÖC'U-LÖSE, a. (Bot.) Loculuous. Clarke.
 LÖC'U-LOÜS, a. [L. loculosus; loculus, a cell.] Having cells; loculose. Brande.
 LÖ'CUM TË'NENS. [L., holding the place.] A deputy; a substitute. Macdonnel.
 LÖ'CUS, n. [L., place.] (Math.) A place to which a point or a line is confined, and in any part of which it may lie under prescribed conditions; — the line generated by a point, or the surface generated by a line, moving according to a fixed law. Eliot.
 LÖ'CUST, n. [L. locusta; locus, a place, and uro, ustus, to burn. Vossius; — It. locusta.]

1. (Ent.) The common name of orthopterous insects of the family Locustidae, of several genera and many species. Baird.
 The most celebrated species is the migratory locust (Locusta migratoria of Linnaeus, which appears periodically in vast numbers in Central Europe, in Egypt, Syria, and the South of Asia, darkening the air as they fly, and soon destroying all the vegetation where they alight. Baird.
 In America the name locust is very improperly given to the cicada of the ancients, or the harvest-fly of the English. Harris.
 2. (Bot.) A kind of tree; locust-tree. Gray.
 Honey locust, (Bot.) a large leguminous tree, with strong thorns, — so called from the sweet pulp contained in its pods; Gleditsia triacanthus. Gray.
 LQ-CÜS'TÄ, n. (Bot.) A spikelet of a grass. Gray.
 LQ-CÜS'TIC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid obtained from the locust, and differing little from acetic acid. Ogilvie.
 LQ-CÜS'TI-CAL, a. Relating to the locust. Byron.
 LÖ'CUST-TRËE, n. (Bot.) The popular name of certain leguminous flowering trees, especially applied to Robinia pseudacacia, or false acacia, a large North American forest-tree, and to Ceratonia siliqua, or Carob, or Algaroba tree, of Southern Europe. Eng. Cyc.
 LQ-CÜ'TION, n. [L. locutio; loquor, locutus, to speak; It. locuzione; Sp. locucion; Fr. locution.] Discourse; speech. Bale, 1550. Gent. Mag. 1847.
 I cite an erroneous locution. Breen.
 LÖC'U-TQ-RY, n. [Low L. locutorium.] An apartment in a monastery, in which monks were allowed to converse. Ogilvie.
 LÖ'DÄM, n. A game at cards. Harrington. Mason.
 LÖDE, n. [A. S. lad, a way; lædan, to lead.]
 1. (Mining.) A metallic or mineral vein; — also written load. Ure.
 2. A cut or reach of water. Wright.
 LÖDE-SHÏP, n. A kind of fishing-vessel. Wright.
 LÖDES'MAN, n. A pilot; a guide. Wright.
 LÖDE'STÄR, n. See LOADSTAR.
 LÖDE'STÖNE, n. See LOADSTONE. Johnson.
 LÖDGE (lōj), n. [It. loggia; Sp. logia; Port. loga; Fr. loge. — Dan., Scot., & Old Eng. loge. — From Old Ger. lauhja; laube, a bower; laub, foliage; Sp. lonja, a gallery. Diez. — From A. S. logian, to place, to put; leggan, to lay. Richardson. — Landais derives Fr. loge from Gr. λογιον, that part of the stage occupied by the actors, referring the verb loger to L. loco, locare, to place.]
 1. A small house or other habitation in a park or forest. "To the sylvan lodge." Milton.
 O for a lodge in some vast wilderness! Cowper.
 2. The place where a wild beast dwells; a den; a lair. Smart.
 3. A small house or tenement connected with a larger. "The porter's lodge." Johnson.
 4. An apartment or hall occupied by a secret society; — also, the society itself. "A lodge of freemasons." Walpole.
 LÖDGE (lōj), v. a. [A. S. logian, to place; Dan. logere; Old Eng. logge. — It. alloggiare; Sp. alajar; Fr. loger.] [s. LODGED; pp. LODGING, LONGED.]
 1. To place; to put; to deposit; to plant.
 All [the glands] are lodged in the most convenient places about the mouth and throat. Derham.
 2. To fix, lay up, or reposit, as in the mind, heart, or memory. "A lodged hate." Shak.
 This cunning king would not understand, though he lodged it, and noted it in some particulars. Bacon.
 3. To afford place to; to reposit; to store.
 The memory can lodge a greater store of images than all the senses can present at one time. Cheyne.
 4. To afford a temporary habitation, or with quarters for the night; to harbor.
 Then called he them in and lodged them; and on the morrow Peter went away with them. Acts x. 23.
 He means to lodge you in the open field. Shak.
 5. To drive into cover or a closed place. "The deer is lodged." Addison.
 6. To beat down or lay flat.
 Summer corn by tempest lodged. Shak.
 Syn. — See HARBOR.

LÖDGE (lōj), v. n. 1. To be deposited or fixed; as, "A falling stone lodged on the roof."
 2. To have an abiding place; to inhabit; to live; to dwell; to reside.
 Something holy lodges in that breast. Milton.
 And lodge such daring souls in little men? Pope.
 3. To stay, abide, or rest for a season, as for the night; to have temporary habitation.
 In the forest of Arabia shall ye lodge. Isa. xxi. 13.
 He lodgeth with one Simon, a tanner. Acts x. 6.
 4. To be beaten down or laid flat, as grain.
 Long-cane wheat they reckon . . . best for rank clays; and its straw makes it not subject to lodge. Mos timer.
 † LÖDGE'A-BLE, a. Convenient or suitable to dwell in. "The house is . . . lodgeable and commodious." Smollett.
 LÖDGE'MENT, n. [Fr. logement; loger, to lodge.]
 1. Act of lodging or state of being lodged.
 Any article which is of size enough to make a lodgement . . . in the small arteries. Paley.
 2. An accumulation; a collection.
 From a mere lodgement of extravasated matter. Sharp.
 3. A place where any thing is lodged or reposit; a repository; a room. Pope.
 4. (Mil.) A work thrown up by besiegers during their approaches in some dangerous part, as in a captured outwork or breach, in order to secure it from being retaken, and to shelter the troops. Glos. of Mik Terms.
 LÖDGER (lōj'er), n. He who, or that which, lodges or is lodged, — particularly a person who occupies a hired room in the house of another.
 LÖDGING, n. 1. The place or apartment where one lodges; temporary habitation or place of rest for the night; a hired room: — residence; habitation; shelter; harbor.
 He desired his sister to bring her away to the lodgings of his friend. Addison.
 2. Convenience to repose or sleep on.
 Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodgings. Ray.
 LÖDGING-HÖUSE, n. A house in which lodgings are let. Smollett.
 LÖDGING-RÖÖM, n. A room to lodge in. Smollett.
 LÖ'ESS, n. [Ger. Löss.] (Geol.) A tertiary alluvial deposit of a loamy nature in the valley of the Rhine; — written also loss. Brande.
 † LÖFFE (lōf), v. n. To laugh. Shak.
 LÖFT, n. [Goth. & Dan. loft; W. lloft; Gael. lobht. — From A. S. hlifan, to lift. Tooke. — See LIFT.]
 1. The highest floor or room in a building; the floor or room immediately under the roof.
 And ever drizzling rain upon the loft. Spenser.
 2. A floor or room above another. "The first, second, or third loft." Smart.
 3. A platform, gallery, or chamber raised within a larger apartment. Britton.
 LÖFT'LY, ad. 1. In a lofty manner; in an elevated place; on high.
 Did ever any conqueror loftily seated in his triumphal chariot yield a spectacle so gallant? Barrow.
 2. Proudly; haughtily; arrogantly; overweeningly. "They speak loftily." Ps. lxxiii. 8.
 LÖFT'LY-NESS, n. 1. The quality or the state of being lofty; height; elevation. Johnson.
 2. Pride; haughtiness. Collier.
 Syn. — See PRIDE.
 LÖFT'Y, a. [From loft, with ig added. Tooke.]
 1. Elevated in place, condition, character, language, or sentiment; of great height; high.
 We began to ascend the steps of the Bochetta, the loftiest of the maritime Apennines, or rather Alps. Eustace.
 2. Proud; haughty; arrogant; magisterial.
 The lofty looks of man shall be humbled. Isa. ii. 11.
 Syn. — See MAGISTERIAL, SUBLIME, TALL.
 LÖG, n. [A. S. ligan, liggan, to lie, — because it lies unmoved or inert. Skinner.]
 1. A bulky piece of wood or timber. Shak.
 2. (Vaut.) A part of the apparatus for measuring the rate of a vessel's velocity, consisting of a flat piece of wood, usually in the form of a quadrant, loaded with lead at its circular edge to make it float upright, and attached to a line. On being thrown from the stern, it rests on the water, and the length of the line drawn from the reel, by the vessel, in a given time, gives the rate of speed. P. Cyc.

♣ The term is often given to the whole apparatus, the piece of wood being called the log-chip; and also to the log-book. — See LOG-BOOK. Dana.

LÖG, n. [Heb. לֹג.] A Hebrew liquid measure, in size 27.58 Parisian cubic inches, and containing 10,275 Parisian grains of rain-water; the quarter of a cab, or a little less than a pint. Kitto.

LÖG, v. n. [i. LOGGED; pp. LOGGING, LOGGED.]
1. To rock; to oscillate. [Local, Eng.] Wright.
2. To get logs for timber. [U. S.] N. A. Rev.

LÖG'AN, } n. A stone naturally so balanced as LÖG'GAN, } easily to be rocked on its foundation;
a rocking-stone. Qu. Rev.

♣ It is also used as an adjective. "Logan stone." Ch. Ob.

LÖG-A-RITHM, n. [Gr. λόγος, ratio, and ἀριθμός, number; It. & Sp. logaritmo; Fr. logarithme.] (Math.) The exponent of the power to which a fixed number, called the base, must be raised to produce a certain other number.

♣ Since any positive number except 1 may be taken as a base, there may be an infinite number of systems; but two only are in use; viz., the Naperian, so named from Napier, a Scottish baron, who invented logarithms, and constructed the system, in which the base is 2.71828, and the common, constructed by Henry Briggs, Prof. at Oxford, Eng., the base of which is 10. Every logarithm consists of an entire number, or an entire and a decimal number, the former being called the characteristic, the latter the mantissa, and of two factors, one depending on the base, and constant, and called the modulus, the other upon the number, changing as the number changes. If the logarithms increase in arithmetical, the corresponding natural numbers increase in geometrical progression, thus:—

Logarithms 0. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5.
Natural numbers 1, 10, 100, 1000, 10000, 100000.
Logarithms are of great use in abridging the labor of trigonometrical calculations, multiplication, division, involution, and evolution of natural numbers being performed, respectively, by the addition, subtraction, multiplication and division of the corresponding logarithms. Da. & P. Cyc.

♣ The Naperian logarithms are sometimes termed natural logarithms, from the modulus of the system being unity; and sometimes hyperbolic logarithms, from their relation to certain areas included between the equilateral hyperbola and its asymptotes. Brande.

LÖG-A-RITH-MÉT'IC, } a. Pertaining to, or LÖG-A-RITH-MÉT'IC-AL, } consisting of, logarithms; logarithmic. Crabb.

LÖG-A-RITH-MÉT'IC-AL-LY, ad. By the use of logarithms. Ash.

LÖG-A-RITH'MIC, } a. [It. & Sp. logaritmico.]
LÖG-A-RITH'MIC-AL, } co; Fr. logarithmique.]
Relating to, or consisting of, logarithms. P. Cyc.

Logarithmic curve, a curve in which the subtangent is the same at every point.—Logarithmic spiral, a curve of which the tangent always makes the same angle with the radius vector. P. Cyc.

LÖG-BÖARD (-börd), n. (Naut.) A board or tablet in which is noted the rate of motion of a vessel, as ascertained by the log, together with the course at the moment, the direction of the wind, &c. P. Cyc.

LÖG-BOOK (-bök), n. (Naut.) A journal in which are recorded the contents of the log-board, together with such other observations relating to navigation as may be made during the day;—called also the log. Dana.

LÖG-GATS, n. pl. [From log.] Wooden pins or bones formerly used in playing a game of the same name, which consisted either in knocking them down set up like ninepins, or in throwing or pitching them like quoits at a stake. Hanmer.
Did these bones cost no more the breeding but to play at loggats with them? Shak.

LÖG'SER, n. A man employed in procuring logs for timber; logman. [Local, U. S.] Minot.

LÖG'SER-HEAD (-häd), n. [log and head.]
1. A blockhead; a thickskull; a dolt. Shak.
2. (Naut.) A spherical mass of iron with a long handle, used for heating tar. Mar. Dict.

3. (Zool.) A species of turtle; Thalassochel's caourana. Agassiz.
To fall or go to loggerheads, to come to blows, to fall to fighting without weapons. L'Estrange.

LÖG'SER-HEAD'ED, a. Stupid; doltish. Shak.

LÖG'-HÖUSE, n. A house constructed of logs.

LÖG'IC (löd'jik), n. [Gr. λογική (sc. τέχνη); λόγος, discourse, reason; L., It., & Sp. logica; Fr. logique.] The science, and also the art, of reasoning; dialectics.

♣ As a science, logic institutes an analysis of the process of the mind in reasoning, and investigates the principles on which argumentation is conducted; as an art, it furnishes such rules as may be derived from those principles, for guarding against erroneous deductions. Some are disposed to view logic as a peculiar method of reasoning, and not, as it is, a method of unfolding and analyzing our reasoning. They have, in short, considered logic as an art of reasoning, whereas (so far as it is an art) it is the art of reasoning; the logician's object being, not to lay down principles by which one may reason, but by which all must reason, even though they are not distinctly aware of them,—to lay down rules not which may be followed with advantage, but which cannot possibly be deviated from in sound reasoning. Whately.

Syn.—See DIALECTICS.

LÖG'I-CAL, a. [Gr. λογικός; L. logicus; It. logicale; Sp. logical; Fr. logique.]

1. Of, according to, or pertaining to, logic; dialectical. Whately.

A process of logical reasoning has been often likened to a chain—supporting a weight. Stewart.

2. Skilled in logic; able in reasoning.

A man who sets up for a judge in criticism should have a clear and logical head. Addison.

LÖG'I-CAL-LY, ad. According to the laws of logic. "Logically deducible." Stewart.

LÖ-GI'CIAN (lō-jish'an), n. [Fr. logicien.]

1. A professor or teacher of logic. Whately.
2. One skilled in logic; an able reasoner.

LÖ-GIS'TIC, } a. [Gr. λογιστικός.] Pertain-LÖ-GIS'TIC-AL, } ing to logistics; sexagesimal.
"Logistic logarithms of a number." Da. & P.

Logistic logarithm, the logistic logarithm of a number of seconds is the excess of the logarithm of 3600 over the logarithm of the given number of seconds. Eluot.

LÖ-GIS'TICS, n. pl. [Gr. λογιστική, practical arithmetic; λογιστικός, skilled in arithmetic; L. & Sp. logistica.] (Math.) A system of arithmetic in which numbers are expressed in the scale of sixty, used in trigonometrical calculations for expressing fractional parts of a circumference, or of a right angle; sexagesimal arithmetic. Da. & P.

LÖG'-LINE, n. (Naut.) The line attached to the log.—See LOG. Mar. Dict.

LÖG'MAN, n. A man employed in getting, carrying, or piling logs; a logger. Shak.

LÖ-GÖC'RA-CY, n. [Gr. λόγος, a discourse, and κρατέω, to rule.] A government in which words are the ruling power. "The American logocracy." Irving.

LÖ-GÖC'RA-PHER, n. One who practises, or is skilled in, logography. Smyth.

LÖG-Q-GRÄPH'IC, } a. [Gr. λογογραφικός.]
LÖG-Q-GRÄPH'IC-AL, } Pertaining to logography. J. Walter.

LÖ-GÖC'RA-PHY, n. [Gr. λογογραφία; λόγος, a discourse, and γράφω, to write; Fr. logographie.]
1. The art, formerly attempted in France, of writing in full the words of an orator while he is speaking, without recourse to short hand.

♣ This was done by twelve or fourteen reporters, the first of whom wrote three or four words, the second, the next three or four words, &c. Brande.

2. (Printing.) A method of printing in which types containing whole words are used instead of single letters. Brande.

LÖG-Q-GRÄPH (lög'q-griff), n. [Gr. λόγος, a word, and γράφω, a riddle.] A sort of riddle. B. Jonson.
LÖ-GÖM'A-CHIST, n. [See LOGOMACHY.] One who contends in, or about, words. Knowles.

LÖ-GÖM'A-CHY (lög'öm'a-ke), n. [Gr. λομαχία; λόγος, a word, and μάχη, a battle; It. logomachia; Fr. logomachie.] A war of words; a contention in or about words. Howell.

LÖ-GÖM'E-TER, n. [Gr. λόγος, ratio, and μέτρον, a measure.] (Chem.) A scale for measuring chemical equivalents. Gent. Mag.

LÖG-Q-MÉT'RIC, } a. (Chem.) Noting, or re-LÖG-Q-MÉT'RI-CAL, } lating to, a scale for measuring chemical equivalents. Dr. Black.

LÖG-Q-THÉTÉ, n. [Gr. λογόθετος; λόγος, an account, and θέτω, to place.] One of the receivers of the finances in the system of Constantine;—the chancellor or supreme guardian of the laws and revenues of the Byzantine empire. Gibbon.

The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea. Gray.

— Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Buchanan, W. Johnston, and Mr. Barclay pronounce this word in the last manner [lō]; but Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Perry, in the first, and that this is the true pronunciation there is little doubt; not only as it is the more general sound of the dipthong, but as it is more expressive of the thing signified. The other sound is, in my opinion, a novelty, and ought to be exploded. Without laying much stress on Dryden's rhyme, it seems to confirm this opinion: —

"Fair to grace his shield; but to now
With horns exalted stands, and seems to low." W.

|| LÖW, n. The voice of a bovine animal, as of an ox or a cow; moo.

2. (Mus.) An elaborate vocal composition, commonly in five or six parts, much in fashion in Italy and England in the 16th and 17th centuries. Moore.

See The etymology of this word is altogether lost. — Rengifo says, corrupted from mandral, a sheepfold. Cardinal Bembo agrees with Rengifo, adding, it is of Provençal origin. Huot derives it from Martegaux, a people of Provence. Covarruvias derives it from mandra [a sheepfold]. Ferrari derives it from Sp. madragar, to rise in the morning. Menage suggests it had its origin in a town called Madrigal in Spain. Others, supposing the earliest specimens of this kind of poetry were addressed to the Virgin (alla madre), have thence derived madriale and madrigale. Brande. — From It. & Sp. mandra, a fold; Fr. mandre; L. mandra; Gr. μάδρα. Richardson.

MAD'RI-GÁL-LER, n. A writer of madrigals. Pope.

MAG-NÊ'SI-A (măg-nê-zhê-a), n. [Fr. magnésie, from Gr. μάγνης, a kind of soapstone found in magnesia.] (Chem.) The only known oxide of magnesium; a white, tasteless, soft, earthy substance, gently purgative, used in medicine. Brande.

MAG-NÊ'SI-AN (măg-nê-zhê-an), a. Relating to, or containing, magnesia. Brande.

MAG'NÊ-SÎTE, n. (Min.) 1. Carbonate of magnesia, or native magnesia. Brande.

2. Hydrous silicate of magnesia; — called also sea-foam, and meerschauum. Duna.

MAG-NÊ'SI-ÛM (măg-nê-zhê-um), n. (Chem.) The metallic base of magnesia. Brande.

MAG'NET, n. [Gr. Μάγνης, Maynêros, a dweller in Magnesia, in Asia Minor; L. magnes, magnetis; It. magnete.] An ore, usually of a dark-gray hue, and a dull-metallic lustre, consisting chiefly of two oxides of iron, together with a small portion of quartz and alumina; natural magnet; the loadstone.

The properties of a magnet are, 1. It attracts iron in all its states except the oxides. 2. If formed into a bar, and suspended freely by a hair, it will turn itself around and settle into some one position. 3. By rubbing on a bar of steel it will give the bar the same properties. 4. The position of rest is different at different places, and different at the same place at distant periods of time. Brande.

Artificial magnet, a body, as a bar or mass of steel or iron, to which the magnetic property has been imparted by the presence of a body possessing it, or by certain processes.

MAG-NÊT'IC, } a. [It. & Sp. magnetico; Fr. magnétique.]

1. Relating to the magnet or to magnetism; containing magnetism. Newton.

2. Having power to attract; attractive. They, as they move towards his all-cheering lamp, Turn as if by their various motions, or are turned By his magnetic beam. Milton.

Magnetic amplitude, an arc of the horizon intercepted between the sun in his rising or setting and the east and west points of the compass. — Magnetic azimuth, an arc of the horizon intercepted between the magnetic meridian and the sun's azimuth circle. — Magnetic battery, a compound magnet, or a series of simple or horseshoe magnets lying one over the other with all their poles similarly disposed, and fastened together in a leather or copper case, so as to act in concert. — Magnetic compensator, a contrivance for counteracting the effect of iron in deranging the bearings of a ship's compass. — Magnetic curves, the position in which iron filings arrange themselves from one pole to the other of a powerful magnet over which they are sprinkled. — Magnetic dip, a property of the magnetic needle by which one of its poles inclines towards the earth. — Magnetic equator, a line drawn through those points of the earth's surface where the dipping needle is at rest in a horizontal position. — Magnetic induction, the power which a magnet has of communicating its properties to a bar of steel placed near to it, though not touching it. — Magnetic meridian, a vertical circle in the heavens which intersects the horizon in the magnetic poles. — Magnetic needle, an artificial magnet, consisting of a slender piece of steel, balanced on a pivot, so that it may settle in the magnetic meridian. — Magnetic poles, the two points on the earth's surface, one in the northern and the other in the southern hemisphere, at which the dipping needle is at rest in a horizontal position. — Magnetic pyrites, native black sulphuret of iron, — so named from its attracting the magnetic needle. — Magnetic telegraph, an instrument employed for communicating intelligence by means of electricity, or of electro-magnetism; electric telegraph. Brande.

MAG-NÊT'IC-CAL-LY, ad. By the power of magnetism or attraction. Burton.

MAG-NÊT'IC-AL-NÊSS, n. The quality of being magnetic. Hist. of the Royal Society.

MAG-NÊ-TI'CIAN, n. Magnetist. Murchison.

† MAG-NÊT'IC-NÊSS, n. The quality of being magnetic; magneticalness. Waterhouse.

MAG-NÊT'ICS, n. pl. The principles or the science of magnetism. Smart.

MAG-NÊ-TIF'ER-OÛS, a. [Eng. magnetism, and L. fero, to bear.] Producing, or conducting, magnetism. Craig.

MAG-NÊT-ISM, n. [It. & Sp. magnetismo; Fr. magnétisme.] — See MAGNET.

1. The property of being magnetic; the power of the magnet to attract iron. Glanvill.

2. Power similar to that of the magnet; the power of attraction. "The magnetism of interest." Glanvill.

3. The science which investigates the phenomena presented by natural and artificial magnets, and the laws by which they are connected.

Terrestrial magnetism, the action of the magnetic fluid in or about the earth, — the effects of that action being manifested in the phenomena presented by magnetized needles and bars. P. Cyc. — Animal magnetism. See MESMERISM.

MAG-NÊT-IST, n. One versed in magnetism; magnetician. Qu. Rev.

MAG-NÊ-TITE, n. (Min.) Magnetic iron ore. Brande.

MAG-NÊT-I-ZÂ'TION, n. The act of magnetizing; mode by which magnetism can be communicated to a bar or mass of steel or iron. Nichol.

MAG-NÊT-IZE, v. a. [It. magnetizzare; Fr. magnétiser.] [i. MAGNETIZED; pp. MAGNETIZING, MAGNETIZED.] To impregnate or imbue with magnetism; to make magnetic. Brande.

MĀLE-, [māl, S. P. Ja. K. Sm. R. C. O. Scott, Kenrick; māl, V. J. F.] [L. male; Fr. mal.] A prefix from the Latin, which, in composition, signifies ill or evil.

§ This syllable, as a prefix, is almost always pronounced short; and the e, which is sunk in the pronunciation, is often omitted in the orthography. Walker says, "Though all our pronouncing dictionaries adopt the short sound of a, and some even leave out the e, yet, as analogy is so decidedly in favor of the long sound, and custom is not quite unanimous, the long sound ought certainly to have the preference, with all who aim at correctness and consistency."

Most of the orthoepists, however, since the time of Walker, as well as before, adopt the short sound of a. There are words in which male has the same origin and meaning; but the letters are not so separable as to have the character of a prefix; as, malefactor.

MĀLE-AD-MĪN-IS-TRĀ'TIŌN, n. Bad management of affairs, or of government.

When a prince was laid aside for maleadministration. Swift.

§ The words maleadministration, malecontent, malpractice, &c., are often written maladministration, malcontent, &c., and they are so printed in the dictionary of Webster, and also in those of Craig and Ogilvie; but nearly all the other English dictionaries retain the e in the prefixed syllable male. Smart says, "Maladministration, malecontent, &c., conform to the actual pronunciation, yet are not the forms adopted by good writers."

1. A kind of hammer or beetle; a heavy wooden hammer; a mallet. Addison.

2. † A stroke; a blow. Spenser.

3. "This word is a whimsical instance of the caprice of custom. Nothing can be more uniform than the sound we give to a, before double l, in the same syllable; and yet this word, when it signifies a wooden hammer, has not only changed its deep sound of a in all into the a in alley, but has dwindled into the short sound of e, in māl, a walk in St. James's Park, where they formerly played with malls and balls, and from whence it had its name; and, to crown the absurdity, a street parallel to this walk is spelt Pall Mall, and pronounced pēll-mēll, which confounds its origin with the French adverb, pelle mēll. For Bailey appears to derive the name of the street justly from pēllere malleo, to strike with a mallet. That this word was justly pronounced formerly, we can scarcely doubt from the rhymes to it:

* And give that reverend head a mallet
Or two, or three, against a wall." Hudibras.

As a corroboration of this, we find a large wooden club, used for killing swine, called and spelt a māl; and the verb signifying to beat or bruise is spelt and pronounced in the same manner. The word mallet, where the latter l is separated from the former, is under a different predicament, and is pronounced regularly." Walker.

MĀLL [māl, S. P. Sm. C. B. Wb.; māl, W. F. Ja.; māl or māwl, K.], n. A public walk;—supposed to be so called from being the place where a game was played with malls and a ball. Johnson.

Ash, Scott, Wr.*], a. [L. matronalis; It. matronale; Sp. matronal.] Relating, or suitable, to a matron; motherly. "Matronal years." Bacon.

"I have excluded Mr. Sheridan's pronunciation, which makes the two first syllables of this word exactly like matron, because the word is a primitive in our language, derived from the Latin matronalis, and, therefore, according to English analogy, when reduced to three syllables, ought to have the accent on the antepenultimate; and this accent has, in simple, always a shortening power. The second pronunciation, though not so strictly agreeable to analogy as the first, is still preferable to Mr. Sheridan's. Matronize and matronically ought to have the first vowel and the accent as in matron, because they are compounds of our own; but we do not subjoin al to words, as we do ize and ly, and therefore words of that termination are under a different predicament. Something like this seems to have struck Mr. Sheridan and Dr. Johnson when they accented the word patronal; for though this word is exactly of the same form, and is perfectly similar in the quantity of the Latin vowels, we find matronal marked with the accent upon the first syllable, and patronal on the second." Walker.

MAT-RON-HOOD (-hūd), n. The state of a matron. Jewsbury.

MAT-RON-IZE, v. a. [i. MATRONIZED; pp. MATRONIZING, MATRONIZED.] To render matronly or sedate. S. Richardson.

MĒANS, n. sing. & pl. 1. That which is used in order to any end; instrument; method; mode; way.

— In this sense, means is used in the singular number, with a singular verb or adjective, when only one thing is referred to; but if more than one thing is referred to, it is used in the plural. "He by that means preserves his superiority." Addison. — "There is no means of escaping persecution." Young. This use of means in the singular number, with an adjective or verb singular, is sanctioned by long and good usage, and by the best English writers, as Bacon, Tillotson, Addison, Pope, Swift, Blackstone, Paley, &c. — "This," says Bishop Hurd, "is one of those anomalies which use has introduced and established in spite of analogy. We should not be allowed to say, 'A mean of making men happy.' — "No person of taste," says Dr. Campbell, in his Philosophy of Rhetoric, "will, I presume, venture so far to violate the present usage, and consequently to shock the ears of the generality of readers, as to say, 'By this mean, by that mean.'"

2. pl. Revenue; income; resources.

Your means are very slender, and your waste great. Shak.

By all means, without doubt; certainly. — By no means, in no way; not at all. — By any means, in any way. — By no manner of means, not at all; not in any way; — a colloquial pleonasm, in use for the sake of emphasis.

MĒ-CHĀN'IC (mē-kān'nik), n. One employed in mechanical labor; an artisan; an artificer.
MĒ-CHĀN'IC, } a. [Gr. μηχανικός, μηχανή, a
MĒ-CHĀN'IC-AL, } contrivance, a machine; μηχανός, a means; L. mechanicus; It. & Sp. meccanico; Fr. mécanique.]
 1. Pertaining to the science of mechanics or to mechanism; ns. "The mechanical powers."
 2. Skilled in mechanics; bred to manual labor. Johnson.
 3. Mean; servile; base; low; — illiberal. Shak.
Base and mechanical niggardise. Holland.
Since employment was counted mechanic. Whitlock.
 4. Noting those who refer all changes in the universe to forces independent of a guiding mind. These mechanic philosophers being no way able to give an account thereof [the formation and organization of the bodies of animals]. Ray.
 5. Noting that which is done, as if without thought or reflection; as, "The rapid fingering of the musician is merely mechanical."
Mechanical philosophy, the science of mechanics applied to physical inquiries. — Mechanical powers, the lever, the balance, the wheel and axle, the pulley, the wedge, the screw, the inclined plane, and the funicular machine. Jameson.
— "The mechanical changes of bodies are those in which they form compounds without losing their identity in the compound substance; chemical changes are those in which the identity of the component bodies is lost, the union being among the particles of matter, so that the body formed is altogether different and distinct from those which form it." Smart.
† MĒ-CHĀN'IC-AL, n. A mechanic. Shak.
† MĒ-CHĀN'IC-AL-IZE, v. a. To render mechanical, mean, or low. Cotgrave.
MĒ-CHĀN'IC-AL-LY, ad. 1. According to the laws of mechanism. Newton.
 2. By forces independent of mind or spirit.
MĒ-CHĀN'IC-AL-NĒSS, n. The quality of being mechanical. Cotgrave.
MĒCH-A-NĪ'CIAN (mēk-a-nish'an), n. [Fr. mécanicien.] A maker of machines, or one skilled in mechanism; a machinist. Burton.
MĒ-CHĀN'IC-Q-ŪNĒM'IC-AL, a. Noting sciences connected with mechanics and chemistry, as magnetism, electricity, and galvanism. Smart.
MĒ-CHĀN'IOS, n. pl. The science of the laws of matter and motion, particularly as applied to the construction of machines; the science that treats of forces and powers, and their action on bodies, either directly or by the intervention of machinery. — See MATHEMATICS.
Theoretical mechanics is divided into two parts: statics, which treats of the equilibrium of forces, and dynamics, which is the science of accelerating or retarding forces, and of the actions they produce. When the bodies under consideration are in the fluid state, these become, respectively, hydrostatics and hydrodynamics, which are comprehended under hydraulics. Brande.
MĒCH'AN-ISM (mēk'an-izm), n. [L. mechanisma; It. meccanismo; Sp. mecanismo; Fr. m. canisme.]
 1. Action according to mechanic laws.
So that all must be performed either by mechanism or accident. Bentley.
 2. The construction of a machine, or the parts of a machine, adapted to the intended effect. Stewart.
MĒCH'AN-IST (mēk'an-ist), n. [Sp. maquinista.]
 1. A mechanician; a machinist. Johnson.
 2. A philosopher who refers all the changes in the universe to the effect merely of mechanical forces. Brande.
MĒCH'AN-IZE (mēk'an-iz), v. a. [Fr. mécaniser.] To form mechanically. [R.] Coleridge.
MĒCH-A-NQ-GRĀPH'IC, a. Treating of mechanics. [R.] Maunder.
MĒCH-A-NQG'RĀ-PHĪST, n. One who multiplies copies of a work of art by a mechanical process. Wright.
MĒCH-A-NQG'RĀ-PHY, n. [Gr. μηχανή, a machine, and γράφω, to write.] The art of multiplying copies of a work of art by mechanical means. Wright.

MĒCH'LIN (mēk'lin), n. Lace made at Mechlin, a city of Belgium. Smart.
MĒCH'LIN, a. Noting a kind of lace made at Mechlin. Simmonds.
MĒCH-LŌ'IC (mēk-lō'ik), a. (Chem.) Noting an acid formed by passing chlorine gas over fused meconine. P. Cyc.
MĒ-CHŌ'A-CĀN, or MĒ-CHŌ'A-CĀN [mē-kō'a-kān, J. K. Sm. Wb.; mē-chō'a-kān, Wr.], n. The root of the Convallaria Mechoacan, or white jalap, from Mechoacan in Mexico, a mild purgative. Dunglison.
MĒ-CŌM'E-TER, n. [Fr. mécomètre, from Gr. μέκος, length, and μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the length of new-born infants. Dunglison.
MĒCŌ-NATE, n. (Chem.) A salt formed of meconic acid and a base. Brande.
MĒ-CŌN'IC, a. [Gr. μηχανικός, belonging to the poppy; μηχανή, the poppy; μηχανιον, opium; Fr. mécanique.] (Chem.) Noting an acid obtained from opium. Brande.
MĒCŌ-NINE, n. [Fr. méconine.] (Chem.) A white, fusible substance obtained from opium; meconia. Brande.
MĒ-CŌN'Ī-ŪM, n. [L., from Gr. μηχανιον.]
 1. Juice of the white poppy; opium. Johnson.
 2. The first fœces of children. Arbutnot.

MET'AL (mēt'tl or mēt'al) [mēt'tl, S. W. P. E. W. Wb.; mēt'al, F. Ja. K. Sm. C.; mēt'tul, J.], n. [Gr. μέταλλον; L. metallum; It. metallo; Sp. metal; Fr. métal.]

1. An undecomposed, opaque body, of peculiar lustre, insoluble in water, fusible by heat, and capable of combining with oxygen.

2. The metals conduct electricity and heat, and, appearing at the negative surface when their compounds are electrolyzed, they are considered as electro-positive bodies. The metals known to the ancients were seven, viz.: gold, silver, iron, copper, mercury, lead, and tin; but their number is now reckoned at forty-eight. They are good conductors of heat, and most of them also of electricity. All metals are capable of combining with oxygen, but with affinities and quantities extremely different. Potassium and sodium have the strongest affinity for it, arsenic and chromium the feeblest. Many metals become acids by a sufficient dose of oxygen, while, with a smaller dose, they constitute salifiable bases. Many of the metals are malleable and ductile, and some, such as bismuth, antimony, and arsenic are brittle. They are all, with the exception of mercury, solid at the temperature of the air. Graham. Ure.

3. Courage; spirit; mettle.—See METTLÉ.

Being glad to find their companions had so much metal, after a long debate the major part carried it. Clarendon.

4. Broken stone for roads. Simmonds.

5. The effective power of guns carried by a vessel of war. Simmonds.

6. An East Indian sweetmeat. Simmonds.

7. "As the metaphorical sense of this word, courage and spirit, has passed into a different orthography, mettle, so the orthography of this sense has corrupted the pronunciation of the original word, and made it perfectly similar to the metaphorical one. It is almost the only instance in the language where al is pronounced in this manner, and the impropriety is so striking as to encourage an accurate speaker to restore the a to its sound as heard in modal." Walker.

ME-TAL'DE-HYDE, n. [Gr. μετά, noting change, and Eng. aldehyde.] (Chem.) A substance into which aldehyde is partially converted when kept at the ordinary temperature in a close vessel. Horsford.

MET-A-LĒP'SIS, n.; pl. MET-A-LĒP'SIS. [Gr. μετάληψις; μεταλαμβάνω, to interchange.] (Rhet.) A continuation of a trope in one word through several significations; as, "The Rhine is in arms," i. e. by the Rhine we mean the country, and by country we mean the people. Smart.

MET-A-LĒP'TIC, a. 1. Relating to meta-

MET-A-LĒP'TI-CAL, a. lepsis.

2. Transverse; transposed. Smart.

MET-A-LĒP'TI-CAL-LY, ad. In a metaleptical manner; transversely. Bp. Sanderson.

MET'ALLED (mēt'tald), a. See METTLED. Todd.

ME-TAL'LIC, a. [It. metallico; Sp. metalico; Fr. métallique.] Relating to metal; containing metal; consisting of metal; resembling metal.

"Metallic ore." Brooke. "Metallic lustre." Dana.

Metallic tractors, metallic rods, as used by Dr. Elisha Perkins, of Norwich, Conn., in the treatment of disease.—See PERKINISM.

ME-TAL'LI-CAL, a. Metallic. [R.] Wotton.

ME-TAL-LI-FAC'TURE, n. [It. metallum, a metal, and facio, to make.] The manufacture of metals. [R.] R. Park.

MET-AL-LIF'ER-ŌUS, a. [It. metallum, a metal, and fero, to bear; It. metallifero; Sp. metalifero; Fr. métallifère.] Producing metals.

ME-TAL'LI-FŌRM, a. [It. metallum, a metal, and forma, form; It. metalliforme.] Having the form of a metal. Smart.

MET'AL-LINE (19) [mēt'al-līn, W. J. R. C. Wb.; mēt'al-līn, E. F.; mē-tāl'līn, S. Ash; mē-tāl'līn, Ja. K.; mēt'al-līn, W.], a. [It. metallino.]

1. Impregnated with metal. "Metalline waters." Bacon.

2. Consisting of metal; metallic. "A metalline cylinder." Boyle.

3. Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, and Bailey accept the second available of this word; but Dr. Konrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Scott, Buchanan, Barclay, Penning, and Entick, the first. I do not hesitate to pronounce the latter mode the more correct." Walker.

MET'AL-LIST, n. A worker in, or one skilled in, metals. Mozon.

MET-AL-LI-ZĀ'TION, n. [Fr. métallisation.] Act or art of changing into metal. Francis.

MET'AL-LIZE, v. a. [Fr. métalliser.] [i. METALLIZED; pp. METALLIZING, METALLIZED.] To convert into a metal; to impart metallic qualities to. Smart.

ME-TAL'LO-CHROME, n. [Gr. μέταλλον, a metal, and χρῶμα, color.] A prismatic tint observed on polished steel plates on which have been deposited by electrolytic action a thin film of peroxide of lead. Nobis.

MET-AL-LŌCH'RO-MY, n. The art of coloring metals. Nobis.

MET-AL-LŌG'RA-PHIST, n. A writer on metals.

MET-AL-LŌG'RA-PHY, n. [Gr. μέταλλον, a metal, and γράφω, to write; Sp. metalografia; Fr. métallographie.] An account or description of metals. Bailey.

MET'AL-LŌID, n. [Gr. μέταλλον, a metal, and εἶδος, form.] (Chem.) A non-metallic, inflammable body, as sulphur, phosphorus, &c.:—applied also to the metallic bases of the fixed alkalies and alkaline earths. Brande.

MET'AL-LŌID, a. Relating to, or resembling MET-AL-LŌID'AL, a. bling, a metal or a metalloid. Buckland.

MET-AL-LŪR'GIC, a. [It. metallurgico; Sp. metalurgico; Fr. métallurgique.] Relating to metallurgy. Ec. Rev.

MET'AI-LŪR'GIST, n. [Fr. métallurgiste.] One who is engaged in extracting metals. Bailey.

MET'AL-LŪR'GY [mēt'al-lūr-jē, W. P. E. F. K. Sm. R. Ash, Nares, Wb.; mē-tāl'lūr-jē, J. Ja. C. Johnson, W. R.; mēt'al-lūr-jē, S.], n. [Gr. μέταλλον, a metal, and ἔργον, work; It. metalurgia; Sp. metalurgia; Fr. métallurgie.] The art of extracting metals from their ores. Ure.

7. "This word is accented three different ways by different orthoepists. Dr. Johnson, Barclay, Penning, and Perry accent it on the second syllable; Sheridan, Buchanan, and Bailey on the third; and Ash, Scott, Nares, and Entick on the first; and Konrick on the first and third. The accent on the first seems to me the most correct." Walker.

MET'AL-MĀN, n. A worker in metals. Burton.

MET-A-MĒR'IC, a. [Gr. μετά, noting change, and μέρος, a part.] (Chem.) Noting bodies of the same composition and atomic weight, but differing remarkably in certain of their properties, probably in consequence of dissimilar molecular constitution. Brande.

MET-A-MŌR'PHIC, a. [See METAMORPHOSE.]
1. Noting change; changeable. Clarke.

2. (Min.) Noting a class of sedimentary rocks which have been changed by heat;—called also stratified primary rocks. Iyell.

MET-A-MŌR'PHISM, n. The state or the quality of being metamorphic. Clarke.

MET-A-MŌR'PHIST, n. (Theol.) One who holds that the body of Christ was transformed into the Deity at the ascension. Smart.

MET-A-MŌR'PHIZE, v. a. To transform; to metamorphose. Wollaston.

MET-A-MŌR'PHOSE (mēt-a-mŏr'fōs), v. a. [Gr. μεταμορφόω, to be transformed; It. metamorfosare; Fr. métamorphoser.] [i. METAMORPHOSING; pp. METAMORPHOSING, METAMORPHOSING.] To change the form or shape of; to transform; to transfigure; to transmute.

This men, my lord, be metamorphosed
From seemly shape to brutish and ugly beasts. Chaucer.

Syn.—See TRANSFIGURE.

MET-A-MŌR'PHOSE, n. [Fr.; L. metamorphosis.] A transformation; a metamorphosis. Thompson.

MET-A-MŌR'PHO-SER, n. One who metamorphoses. Gaevigne.

MET-A-MŌR'PHO-SIC, a. Transforming; changing the form. "Metamorphic fables." Pownall.

MET-A-MŌR'PHO-SIS, n.; pl. MET-A-MŌR'PHO

στῆς. [Gr. μεταμορφώσις; μετά, prefix indicating change, and μορφή, form.]

1. Change of form or shape; transformation. What, my noble colonel in metamorphosis? On what occasion are you transformed? Dryden.

2. (Zool.) The change of form which some insects and other animals undergo in passing from one stage of existence to another. Brande.

3. (Bot.) The adaptation of one organ to several different purposes, connected with which are changes in form, size, color, &c. P. Cyc.

MÉT-A-MOR-PHOS'TI-CAL, a. Relating to, or affected by, metamorphosis. Pope.

MÉT-A-PHOR, n. [Gr. μεταφορά; μετά, over, and φέρω, to carry; L. metaphora; It. & Sp. metafora; Fr. métaphore.] (Rhet.) A figure of speech founded on the resemblance which one object is supposed to bear, in some respect, to another, or a figure by which a word is transferred from a subject to which it properly belongs, to another, in a manner that a comparison is implied, though not formally expressed; a comparison or simile comprised in a word; as, "Thy word is a lamp to my feet." Ps. cxix. 105.

Of metaphors, those generally conduce most to energy or vivacity of style which illustrate an intellectual by a sensible object. Hakely.

Syn.—A metaphor differs from a simile in being expressed without any sign of comparison; Thus, "The silver moon" is a metaphor; "The moon is bright as silver" is a simile.—See FIGURE, SMILE.

MÉT-A-PHÖR'IC, a. [It. & Sp. metaforico; MÉT-A-PHÖR'I-CAL, Fr. métaphorique.] Relating to, or partaking of, metaphor; not literal; figurative. "Metaphorical expressions." Brown.

MÉT-A-PHÖR'I-CAL-LY, ad. Figuratively; not literally; by metaphor. Stewart.

MÉT-A-PHÖR'I-CAL-NÉSS, n. The quality of being metaphorical. Ash.

MÉT-A-PHÖR-IST [mét'-a-för-ist, Sm. R. C. W'r.; mét'-a-för-ist, K.; mé-taf'-o-ríst, Todd], n. A maker of metaphors. Arbutnot.

MÉT-A-PHÖS'PHATE, n. (Chem.) A salt formed of metaphosphoric acid and a base. Wright.

MÉT-A-PHOS PHÖR'IC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid formed by burning phosphorus under a bell-glass filled with air or with oxygen. Brande.

MÉT-A-PHRASE (mét'-a-fraz), n. [Gr. μεταφράσις; μετά, indicating change, and φράσις, a speaking, a phrase; Sp. metafrase; Fr. metaphrase.] A transfer of phrases or idioms, without alteration, into another language; a mere verbal translation.

The translation is not so loose as paraphrase, nor so close as metaphrase. Dryden.

MÉT-TAPH'RA-SIS, n. [Gr.] A merely verbal translation; a metaphrase. Crabb.

MÉT-A-PHRÄST, n. [Gr. μεταφράστης; It. & Sp. metafraste; Fr. métaphraste.] A maker of a metaphrase; a literal translator. Warton.

MÉT-A-PHRÄS'TIC, a. Close in interpretation; tation; literal. "Metaphrastic versions." Warton.

MÉT-A-PHY'S'IC, n. Metaphysics. [R.] Watts.

The singular form metaphysic is sometimes, though not often, met with. "Thus far we have argued for the sake of argument, and opposed metaphysic to metaphysic." Beattie.

See physic beg the Stagyrte's defence; See metaphysic call for and on sense. Pope.

MÉT-A-PHY'S'IC, a. [It. & Sp. metafísico; MÉT-A-PHY'S'I-CAL, Fr. métaphysique.]

1. Pertaining or according to metaphysics. "Metaphysical speculations." Stewart.

2. † Preternatural; supernatural. Shak.

3. Versed in metaphysics. Johnson.

MÉT-A-PHY'S'I-CAL-LY, ad. In a metaphysical manner; by metaphysics. South.

MÉT-A-PHY-S'I'CIAN (mét'-a-fé-zish'an), n. [Fr. métaphysicien.] One versed in metaphysics or intellectual philosophy. Stewart.

MÉT-A-PHY'S'I-CÖ-THÉ-O-LÖG'I-CAL, a. Embracing metaphysics and theology. Disraeli.

MÉT-A-PHY'S'ICUS (mét'-a-fiz'iks), n. pl. [Gr. μετά τα φυσικά, after those things which relate to external nature, or, after physics;—an expression used by Aristotle in the chapter of one of his works which follows that relating to matters of natural philosophy.—"From this part of Aristotle's logic, there is an easy transition to what has been called his metaphysics; a name unknown to the author himself, and given to his most abstract philosophical works by his editors, from an opinion that those books ought to be studied immediately after his physics, or treatises on natural philosophy." Gillies.—Low L. metaphysica; It. & Sp. metafísica; Fr. métaphysique.] The philosophy of mind, as distinguished from that of matter; a science of which the object is to explain the principles and causes of all things existing:—according to Stewart, a science "now understood as equally applicable to all those inquiries which have for their object to trace the various branches of human knowledge to their first principles in the constitution of the human mind":—according to Brande, "the science which regards the ultimate grounds of being, as distinguished from its phenomenal modifications":—a speculative science which soars beyond the bounds of experience; intellectual philosophy; mental philosophy; mental science; ontology; psychology; pneumatology.—See MATHEMATICS.

MÉT-TAPH'Y-SIS, n. [Gr. μεταφύσις, to become by a change.] Change of form or shape; transmutation, or metamorphosis. Hamilton.

With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. Mat. vii. 2.

MÉTTE, n. [A. S. mete, mitta.—L. meta, a goal, a limit.] Measure; limit; boundary; bound. "Metes and bounds." Burrit.

MÉTTE'CÖRN, n. A certain measure or quantity of corn formerly given by the lord of a manor as a reward for labor. Wright.

† MÉTTE'LY, a. Proportionable. Chaucer.

† MÉT-TEMP'SY-ENÖSE, v. a. [Gr. μετεμψύχω.] To translate from body to body as a soul. Peacham.

MÉT-TEMP-SY-ENÖ'SIS (mét-temp-se-kö'sis), n. [Gr. μετεμψύχωσις; μετά, noting change, and ἐμψύχω, to animate; ἐν, in, and ψυχή, life, soul; L. metempsychosis.] The transmigration of the soul from one body to another, or through different successive bodies.

The sages of old live again in us, and in opinion; there is a metempsychosis. Gianvill.

MÉT-EMP-TÖ'SIS, n. [Gr. μετά, after, and ἐμπίπτω, to fall on.] (Astron.) The solar equation necessary to prevent the new moon from falling a day too late, or the suppression of the bissexile every 134 years. Brande.

MÉT-TE-OR [mét'-te-ur, P. J. Ja. K. Sm. W'r.; mét'-tur, S. E. F.; mét'-te-ur or mét'-che-ur, W'r.], n. [Gr. μετέωρα, things in the air; μετά, noting direction, and αἶωρα, a hovering in the air; It. meteora; Sp. meteorio; Fr. météore.]

1. Any natural phenomenon in the atmosphere or the clouds;—applied particularly to a fiery or luminous body occasionally seen moving rapidly through the atmosphere, to a fireball, called also a falling star, and to the phenomenon otherwise called ignis-fatuus.

2. Any thing that transiently dazzles or strikes with wonder. Smart.

Aerial meteors, winds, whirlwinds, &c.; aqueous meteors, dew, fogs, rain, snow, &c.; luminous meteors, halo, mirage, rainbow, &c.; igneous meteors, falling stars, lightning, aurora borealis, &c. Brande.

MÉT-TE-ÖR'IC, a. [It. & Sp. meteorico; Fr. MÉ-TE-ÖR'I-CAL, Fr. météorique.]

1. Relating to meteors. Bp. Hall.

2. Bright, dazzling, and transient. Brande.

Meteoric iron, iron as found mixed with nickel in meteoric stones or aerolites.

MÉT-TE-ÖR-I-SM, n. [Fr. météorisme.] (Med.) Distention of the abdomen with wind. Hoblyn.

MÉT-TE-ÖR-ITE, n. A meteoric stone; a meteorolite. Ure.

† MÉT-TE-ÖR-IZE, v. n. [Gr. μετεωρίζω, to rise to a height.] To ascend in evaporation. Evelyn.

MÉT-TE-ÖR-ÖG'RA-PHY, n. [Gr. μετέωρα, meteors, and γραφία, to describe.] A description of the weather; meteorology. Month. Rev.

MÉT-TE-ÖR-O-LITE [mét'-te-ör-o-lit, Sm.; mét'-te-ör-lit, K. W'r. W'b.], n. [Gr. μετέωρα, meteors, and λίθος, a stone; It. meteorolito; Fr. météorolithe.] (Min.) A meteoric stone; a semi-metallic mass falling from the atmosphere; an aerolite. Brande.

MÉT-TE-ÖR-O-LÖG'IC, a. [It. & Sp. meteorico; MÉT-TE-ÖR-O-LÖG'I-CAL, Fr. météorologique.] Relating to the atmosphere and its phenomena; relating to meteorology. Brown.

MÉT-TE-ÖR-ÖL'Ö-GIST, n. One versed in meteorology. Howell.

MÉT-TE-ÖR-ÖL'Ö-GY, n. [Gr. μετέωρα, meteors, and λογία, a discourse; It. & Sp. meteorologia; Fr. météorologie.] The science of meteors;—the science of the atmosphere and its various phenomena, particularly the state of the weather.

In its extended sense, meteorology comprehends climatology, and the greater part of physical geography; and its object is to determine the diversified and incessantly changing influences of heat, light, electricity, and magnetism, on land, in the sea, and in the atmosphere. Brande.

MÉT-TE-ÖR-Ö-MÄN-CY, n. [Gr. μετέωρα, meteors, and μαντεία, prophecy; It. meteoromanzia; Fr. météoromanza.] Divination by meteors. Smart.

MÉT-TE-ÖR-Ö-SCÖPE, or MÉT-TE-ÖR-Ö-SCÖPE [mét'-te-ör-o-sköp, W'r.; mét'-te-ör-o-sköp, Sm.; mét'-te-ör-o-sköp, W'r.], n. [Gr. μετεωροσκοπεῖν; μετέωρα, meteors, and σκοπεῖν, to view; It. meteoroscopo; Fr. météoroscope.] An instrument for taking the magnitude and distances of heavenly bodies; an astrolabe. Wright.

MÉT-TE-ÖR-ÖS'CO-PY, n. That part of astronomy which treats of the differences of the remote heavenly bodies, their distances, &c. Crabb.

† MÉT-TE-Ö-ROÜS, a. Having the nature of a meteor. Milton.

MĒ'TĒR, n. He who, or that which, metes or measures. Burke.

MĒTE-STICK, n. (Naut.) A staff to measure the height of the hold of a ship, and to level the ballast. Crabb.

† MĒTE'WAND (-wōnd), n. A mete-yard. Ascham.

ME-THĒG'LĪN, n. [W. meddyglyn.] A beverage made of honey and water fermented; mead. Shak.

ME THINKS', v. impersonal. [i. METHOUGHT.] I think; it seems to me. Spenser. Addison.
Now somewhat obsolescent. — See MESEEMS.

MĒTH'QD, n. [Gr. μέθοδος; μετά, after, and δόξω, a way; L. methodus; It. & Sp. metodo; Fr. méthode.]

1. A suitable or convenient arrangement with a view to some end; an orderly or regular course; a regular order; regularity; disposition.

2. Way; manner; rule; mode; means.

3. Classification; system; as, "The method of Buffon"; "The method of Linnæus."

Syn. — See DISPOSITION, REGULARITY, SERIES, SYSTEM.

MĒ-THŌD'IC, } a. [L. methodicus; It. & Sp. me-thōd'ic-cal; Fr. méthodique.]
Having method; disposed in regular order; conformed to rule; regular; orderly; formal; systematic; systematical; exact.

Syn. — He is methodical who does things according to method; he is systematical who does things according to system; he is regular who does things according to order or rule. Methodical in business; systematic in the disposing of time; regular in conduct. Methodical or systematic arrangement: regular course; orderly proceeding; exact account; formal manner. — See FORMAL.

MĒ-THŌD'IC-AL-LY, ad. In a methodical manner; orderly; regularly; systematically. Dryden.

MĒTH'QD-ISM, n. The system or principles of the Methodists. Warburton.

MĒTH'QD-IST, n. [It. & Sp. Metodista; Fr. Méthodiste.]

1. † An observer of method.

I dance little after method, because no methodist. Hermetical Banquet, 1653.

2. (Med.) A physician who practises by method or rule. Boyle.

3. (Theol.) One of a religious denomination, who date their rise from 1729, at the English university of Oxford. The leaders were John Wesley and George Whitefield.

The ardent piety and rigid observance of system, in every thing connected with the new opinions, displayed by the Wesleys [John Wesley and his brother Charles, students at Oxford] and their adherents, as well as in their college studies, which they never neglected, attracted the notice and excited the jeers of the various members of the university, and gained for them the appellation of Methodists, in allusion to the Methodici, a class of physicians at Rome who practised only by theory. Brande.

"A methodist was once a follower of a certain method of philosophical induction, now of a method in the fulfilment of religious duties. But in either case method, or orderly progression, is the soul of the word." Trench.

MĒTH'QD-IST'IC, } a. [Sp. metodístico.] Re-MĒTH'QD-IST'IC-AL, } lating to the Methodists, or to their principles. Lavington.

MĒTH'QD-IST'IC-AL-LY, ad. In a methodistical manner. Ch. Ob.

MĒTH'QD-I-ZĀ'TION, n. The act of methodizing or setting in order. J. Bentham.

MĒTH'QD-IZE, v. a. [It. metodizzare; Sp. meto-dizar.] [i. METHONIZED; pp. METHONIZING, METHONIZED.] To regulate; to dispose in order; to arrange. Burke.

The man who does not know how to methodize his thoughts has always a barren superfluity of words. Addison.

MĒTH'QD-IZ-ER, n. One who methodizes.

MĒTH'QD-ŌL'Q-GY, n. [Eng. method and Gr. λόγος, a discourse.] A discourse concerning method. Month. Rev. Morell.

MĒ'THŌL, n. [Gr. μέθυ, wine, and ἔλν, wood.]

(Chem.) A colorless liquid produced in the distillation of wood. Kane.

ME-THOUGHT' (mē-thāwt'), i. from methinks. I thought.

Methought I saw my late espoused saint,
Brought to me, like Alcides, from the grave. Milton.

MĒTH'ŪLE, n. (Chem.) The name given to the hypothetical radical of methylic alcohol; methyl. Horsford.

MĒTH'YL, n. (Chem.) Methule. Hoblyn.

MĒTH'Y-LĒNE, n. [Gr. μέθυ, wine, and ἔλν, wood.] (Chem.) The hypothetical radical containing one equivalent less of hydrogen than methyl. Dumas.

ME-THŪL'IC, a. (Chem.) Noting alcohol obtained by the distillation of wood. Horsford.

MĒ'TIC, n. [Gr. μέτοικος, a resident alien; μετα-λίσσω, to change one's abode.] One living with others in their dwelling or city. Mitford.

† ME-TIC'Ū-LOŪS, a. [L. meticulous; metus, fear.] Fearful; timid. Coles.

† ME-TIC'Ū-LOŪS-LY, ad. Timidly. Browne.

MĒ'TIS, n. [Gr. Μῆτις, Metis, the first wife of Jupiter.] (Astron.) An asteroid discovered by Graham in 1848. Lovering.

MĒT'LA, n. (Bot.) An American plant. Tate.

MĒT'Q-ŌHE, n. [Gr. μετὰ, after.] (Arch.) The interval between two dentils in the Ionic entablature. Weale.

MĒT'Q-LĒ'IC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid produced by the action of sulphuric acid on oleic acid. Fremy.

ME-TŌN'IC, a. Noting a cycle of 19 years, or, more accurately, 6940 days, at the end of which time the new moons fall on the same days of the year; — so named from Meton, an Athenian. Brande.

MĒT'Q-NŪM'IC, } a. [It. & Sp. metonimico.]
MĒT'Q-NŪM'IC-AL, } Relating to metonymy; put for something else. Ash.

MĒT'Q-NŪM'IC-AL-LY, ad. By metonymy; not literally. Bailey.

ME-TŌN'Y-MY, or MĒT'Q-NŪM-Y [mē-tōn'ē-mē, P. J. F. C. B. Rees, Ash, W. R.; mē-tōn'ē-mē, S. E. K. Sm. R. O. Nares; mē-tōn'ē-mē or mē-tōn'ē-mē, IV. Ju.], n. [Gr. μετωνομία; μετά, nothing change, and ὄνομα, a name; L. metonymia; It. & Sp. metonimia; Fr. métonymie.] (Rhet.) A change of name; — a figure of speech by which the effect is put for the cause, or the cause for the effect, the container for the thing contained the sign for the thing signified, &c. Thus, by metonymy, gray hairs would signify old age.

One very common species of metonymy is, when the badge is put for the office. Thus we say, the mitre for the priesthood; the crown for royalty; for military occupation we say the sword; and for the literary professions, those especially of theology, law, and physic, the common expression is the gown. Campbell.

"Authorities for the two different ways of accenting this word are so nearly balanced, that it is hard to say which preponderates. Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, and Bailey are for the first [mē-tōn'ē-mē], and Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, W. Johnston, Mr. Scott, Mr. Barclay, Entick, and Gibbons, the author of the Rhetoric, for the last. In this case, the ear and analogy ought to decide. I have no doubt but the accent on the first syllable was the ancient mode of pronouncing this word, as we find it so accented in almost all the systems of rhetoric published several years ago for the use of schools; and as these words from the Greek were generally pronounced in the Latin manner, that is, the accent on the antepenultimate in metonymia, and not on the penultimate, as in μετωνομία, the secondary accent naturally fell on the first syllable, which is naturally become the principal of the English metonymy. But that the ear is pleased with the antepenultimate accent cannot be doubted; and that this word has as great a right to that accent as lipathymy, homonymy, synonymy, &c., is unquestionable. Besides, the enclitic accent, as this may be called, is so agreeable to the ear, that without evident reasons to the contrary, it ought always to be preferred." Walker.

MIL-LE-PĒD, n.; pl. MIL-LE-PĒDS. [L. millepeda; mille, a thousand, and pes, pedis, a foot; It. millepiedi; Fr. mille-pieds.] An insect having a great many feet, as the Armadillo vulgaris, the Porcellio scaber, the Oriscus asellus, or common wood-louse. Brande.

The older English dictionaries which contain this word, give it only in the plural, and the majority of them pronounce it in three syllables—mille-pedes. Of the lexicographers who give the singular form, Smart, Craig, and Ogilvie spell it thus, mille-pede; Todd, Jameson, Knowles, Reid, and Webster thus, mille-ped.

The following are the remarks of Walker on the pronunciation and orthography of millepedes:—

"The former pronunciation of this word [mille-pedes] is adopted by Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Entick; and the latter [mille-pede] by Mr. Nares, W. Johnston, Buchanan, and Perry. That the latter is the more fashionable cannot be denied; but that the former is the more correct is evident from similar words which have been Anglicized, thus bipedes and quadrupeds have dropped their Latin final syllable; and why the word in question should retain it, cannot be conceived. Besides, though seldom used in the singular, there is no reason why it should not be so used; and then it must necessarily become milleped; centipede, properly centiped, is adopted, and, by forming centipeds in the plural, show us how we ought to form and pronounce the word in question; and if antipodes has not yet submitted to this analogy, it is because, like cantharides, caryatides, manes, &c., it is never used in the singular." Walker.—See SOLIPED.

MIL-LE-PŌRE, n. [L. mille, a thousand, and porus, a pore; It. millepora; Sp. millepora; Fr. millepore.] (Zool.) One of a genus of hydroid medusæ that build a coral branching stem in which are numerous pits or pores for the retreat of the heads. Agassiz.

MINE, pronoun possessive and pronominal adjective, from I. [Goth. meina; A. S. min; Dut. mijn; Ger. mein; Dan. & Sw. min; Icel. minn.—Gr. ἐμός, μόν; L. meus; It. & Sp. mío; Fr. mon.—Russ. moy; Polish moy.] (Used after the noun.) Of or belonging to me; as, "This book is mine," i. e. my book.

3. In the solemn style, it is used as a pronominal adjective, before words beginning with a vowel or a vowel sound, instead of my; as, "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation."—"When this word is used adjectively, before a word beginning with a vowel or h mute, as in saying, 'On mine honor,' the complete absence of accentual force, and a quite colloquial, will permit the shortening of the sound into min," Smart.

4. The words mine, thine, hers, ours, yours, theirs, also his, when standing alone, though commonly styled by grammarians possessive pronouns, represent, not only possessors, but also things possessed; and they are used both in the nominative and objective cases, and in the singular and plural numbers; and they are used as substantives, or as substitutes for substantives.

"Mine, thine, his, hers, yours, theirs, must be called personal pronouns possessive. For these words are always used substantively, so as to include the meaning of some noun in the third person singular or plural, in the nominative or objective case." Thus, if we are speaking of books, and say, 'Mine are here,' mine means my books, and it must be a personal pronoun possessive, in the third person plural, and nominative to the verb are. Again, if we are speaking of a garden, and say, 'I admire yours,' yours means your garden, and it must be deemed a personal pronoun possessive in the third person singular, and objective case." Smart.

"The words mine, thine, hers, ours, yours, theirs, are possessive pronouns of the nominative or objective case, as they represent, not possessors, but things possessed. Each of them may represent a plural as well as a singular noun. Thus, in the sentence, 'Your specimens are more numerous, but mine are finer,'—the word your is a personal pronoun, plural form, possessive case, or a possessive adjective, designating the noun specimens; but mine is a possessive pronoun, plural number, nominative case, as being the subject of the verb are." J. Hunter.

MIN'ER-AL, n. [It. minerale; mina, a mine; Sp. mineral; Fr. minéral.] A natural body destitute of organization or life; a substance found in or on the earth, which is neither animal nor vegetable. Dana.

3. In the strictest sense, a mineral is a natural inorganic body, with a definite composition, and a regular determinate form or series of forms. Most mineral systems, however, include coal, amber, and mineral resins; as also certain amorphous substances of no precise chemical composition, as some kinds of clay. Minerals have been classified in various ways, but perhaps the most rational method is that which is based upon chemical composition. Tomlinson.

MIN'ER-AL, a. 1. Relating to, or consisting of, minerals. "Mineral ingredients." Woodward.

2. Impregnated with, or containing, minerals. "Mineral waters." Brande.

Mineral adipocere, a greasy bitumen found in the argillaceous ores of iron.—Mineral carotekou, the elastic bitumen found at Castleton, in Derbyshire.—Mineral chamæleon, a manganese of potash, so called from the variety of colors which its aqueous solution exhibits.—Mineral charcoal, fibrous mineral coal, or coal from which the gaseous particles have been driven off by partial burning so as to leave it in the state of coke.—Mineral green, carbonate of copper, obtained by precipitating a hot solution of sulphate of copper by carbonate of soda.—Mineral pitch, solid bitumen or asphaltum.—Mineral tar, the same as petroleum.—Mineral waters, waters or springs impregnated with mineral substances. Brande.

MIN'ER-AL-IST, n. One skilled in minerals. Boyle.MIN'ER-AL-I-ZÁ'TION, n. The act of mineralizing. Ure.MIN'ER-AL-IZE, v. a. [i. MINERALIZED; pp. MINERALIZING, MINERALIZED.]
